God is also described with equal correctness by the terms Spirit, Life, Truth, and the word already used, Love. Likewise, we may properly refer to God as infinite Mind or Principle. Each of these terms conveys a different shade of meaning. All taken together serve to enlarge our conception of Deity. It will be seen that that which is infinitely good is also loving, tender, steadfast, merciful and "unutterably kind" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 312). That which is Love itself must be not only loving and good, but immortal, universal and omnipotent. Thus through using some of these definitions of God and of His qualities or attributes, we find that we have greatly amplified our sense of God. Not that words can adequately describe the infinite and eternal, not that the employment of terms or phrases can exhaust God; but the proper use of these terms can help us better to comprehend the divine nature.

GOD THE ONLY CAUSE.

According to Christian Science this infinite God, divine Love, eternal Life, incorporeal Spirit or Mind, is the cause of all that exists. Since there is but one cause, which is infinite and good, there can be but one kind of effect or manifestation, which must also be good and infinite. As the effect, or manifestation, of a creator that is infinite Spirit, or Mind, we can have an expression no less than the sum total of those spiritual ideas that express their divine origin. Therefore, we learn in Christian Science that the only real, enduring, indestructible universe is mental or spiritual and exists as the result or effect of the one infinitely good cause. This throws new light on the Scriptural declaration that God made all "that was made" (John i. 3) and "God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good" (Gen. i. 31).

MAN REFLECTS GOD.

The universal, complete expression of divine Mind comprising all that exists by way of creation, necessarily includes spiritual man. This man reflects perfectly the infinite being called God. And this statement accords with the description of creation in the first chapter of Genesis, which says that God made man in "his own image" and after His likeness. If God made man in His image, it is certain that man must be exactly like his creator. When we recall that the one only cause is divine Mind, Spirit, Life, Love, then we see that man in the image of his creator must be spiritual, eternal, loving and good, like his divine Principle.

THE UNITY OF GOD.

Reviewing our discussion from this point, we see that we have, first, a perfectly good God who is infinite Spirit, or Mind. Next, we have a perfectly good universe which is spiritual or mental, and consists of those ideas that are good and true. Then we have a perfectly good man included in this spiritual universe as the reflection or image of his infinite Father-Mother, divine Mind.

THE APPEARANCE OF EVIL.

But, you say, what of a material universe and mortal man? What of the existence into which mortals seem to have been born and out of which they appear to pass into an uncertain and indefinite future state? What of sin and suffering and sickness and death? What of evil, and matter? We shall not ignore them, although we have already seen why in the best sense they cannot be real for the simple reason that they are not good. No one believes that evil is good, although he may try to make himself believe that in some way it has been provided for his benefit. We have begun with a good cause, which made all "that was made." Effect must be like cause.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

COST OF JOHN BARLEYCORN.

The credit side of the account of a city with John Barleycorn is very widely advertised by the liquorites. They endeavor to make the public believe that there is no debt side and far too few communities take the trouble to investigate and discover what is paid out of their treasuries to offset the license money paid in by the saloons. At the instigation of Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia's account with the liquor traffic has been carefully figured up and given to the public. It shows that John Barleycorn costs the city each year more than $3,000,000; that more than one-half of the expense of the police department of the great city is made necessary by the liquor traffic; that the per cent of expense of other departments of the city government, due to alcohol is, suicides, 75 per cent; homo for the indigent, 60 per cent; general hospital, 35 per cent; county prison, 80 per cent; district attorney's office, 80 per cent; clerk of the quarter sessions, 80 per cent; juvenile court, 50 per cent.

Such figures certainly reflect upon the common business sense of the man voters of Philadelphia, especially in view of the statement in the report, that "the sum of $3,000,000 is far in excess of the money paid into the treasury for liquor licenses."

A similar problem in civic economy should be presented to the voters of every city which tolerates the liquor traffic.

A NATURAL HANOICAP.

The Life Extension Institute is an organization which is fighting disease through publicity. Its membership includes some of the greatest living scientists and educators. These authorities have put forth many radical statements concerning alcohol. They declare that the present antagonistic attitude of several European monarchs towards this "deadening drug" is fully warranted by scientific evidence. "Alcohol," they say, "is a handicap for a nation at war. It is a handicap for an individual in the struggle for existence. This is not the judgment of scientists alone, nor of weaklings and faddists, but of the best-brained, strongest men upon whom has fallen the tremendous burden of guiding great nations through the greatest crisis in history."

EFFECT OF ALCOHOL.

Dr. T. Alexander McNicholl, surgeon in Red Cross hospital, investigated 55,000 school children for the New York Academy of Medicine. He found 58 per cent below the standard of intelligence, 17 per cent dullards, 25 per cent deficient, and 16 per cent nearly deficient. Fifty-three per cent of the defective were the children of drinking parents. Only 10 per cent of the children of abstaining parents were dullards. The family history of 3,711 children were traced for three generations. Of the children of abstaining parents and grandparents 4 per cent were dullards, while of the children of abstaining parents and drinking grandparents, 78 per cent were dullards.

AN UNCOMPROMISING ENEMY.

"I am the sworn, eternal and uncompromising enemy of the liquor traffic," declared Dr. Billy Sunday, recently in Philadelphia. "Stand by me," he pleaded, "in my fight for your homes, your families, and your decency. The saloon is doomed; the drunken sentiment already holds the balance of power in the United States. In God's good time we are going to sing 'My Country 'Tis of Thee' and there won't be a saloon in it. We might as well try to dam Niagara Falls with toothpicks as try to stem the great tide of temperance reform that is sweeping our country."

WORTH WHILE.

"Under the operation of the present prohibition law wonders have been worked in North Carolina. The improvement can be seen in every city and hamlet, and many men who voted against the present law have since its operation become convinced that it has been more than worth while," says the Charlotte Times in speaking of the result of prohibition in North Carolina.

ROOSEVELT'S OPINION.

Colonel Roosevelt says: "There is nothing more absurd than the belief that the closing of the saloon will cause workmen to lose their jobs. There are few things more important to our social advancement than the loosening of the grip of the liquor interest upon the labor movement. The saloon always represents economic loss."

ALCOHOL QUESTION FIRST.

"If the alcohol question were solved there would still remain other social questions to be solved, but it is also true that as things stand today no other question of social welfare can be taken up with any prospect of securing efficient results until the alcohol question is solved."—Judge Hermann Popert, Hamburg, Germany.

Lecture on Christian Science

Evil is not like good. Matter is not like spirit. Therefore, whatever final disposition is made of evil and matter, they cannot reasonably be attributed to the one good, spiritual cause.

UNREALITY OF EVIL.

Christian Science in explaining the unreal nature of evil first declares that matter, being non-intelligent, cannot be conscious of evil. It cannot of itself sin or have the impulse to sin. It cannot be hateful, dishonest or afraid. What, then, sins? God cannot behold or look upon evil or iniquity. He cannot have created evil. Therefore, He cannot know or be conscious of it. Christian Science consequently makes the positive assertion that evil, being utterly opposed to good and totally unlike good, does not exist in God or as the manifestation or effect of God. Christian Scientists do not, however, ignore the claim of sin to exist as a part of human experience. They understand that in this sense it must be recognized as a false claim to be repeated of and forsaken before it can be demonstrated to be what it really is—nothing. They understand that the scientific forsaking of sin and its forgiveness, or destruction, comes through Christ, the true, spiritual idea of God as being of "purer eyes than to behold evil" (Hab. 1, 13).

UNREALITY OF MATTER.

Closely associated with the thought of evil is the thought of matter. Indeed, they cannot be dissociated. Where one is, the other will always be found. Mrs. Eddy's teaching that matter is unreal and that what appears to be material substance is but the concept of the human mind, is slowly, but surely, being recognized by material scientists to be correct. It has been said of what is called matter that it is "a suppositional vacuum in a hypothetical medium." This "hypothetical medium" is known as ether, of which it has been recently written by Edgar Lucien Lurkin, "The most refined experiments ever made, those by Michelson, failed utterly to detect the existence of ether." Rather indefinite and unsatisfactory as a medium, is it not?

A noted Englishman, Mr. Balfour, at the London Congress of the Natural Scientists of Great Britain, is credited with having said: "The material sciences are now explaining matter by explaining it away." The material scientists who have explained matter away, leaving nothing in its place but an indefinite hypothesis have not done as well as Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, for she has explained the unreality of matter and of its supposed cause by revealing the one infinite, indivisible substance to be divine Mind and its ideas. (See Science and Health, p. 463.)

We seem to exist in matter bodies which are part of a material universe. But what dependence may we place on the five physical senses which alone testify to the reality of this existence? At best the testimony of the physical senses is faulty and unreliable. Many familiar illustrations of the unreliability of sense-testimony could be cited. Every one knows that the sense of taste is deceptive and sometimes makes very cold things seem hot. The sense of hearing often seems to make sound originate in some place where it does not. To illustrate the deceptive nature of the sense of touch, one need only cross the second finger over the index finger, and, after closing his eyes, feel a pencil or small round object on a flat surface. There will appear to be two of these round objects instead of one. If the sense-testimony is left uncorrected.

If these senses cannot testify truly of material things, how can they be expected to give reliable evidence regarding those things which are spiritual and eternal? As a matter of fact, the physical senses have no higher conception of reality than that which can be weighed and measured, whereas spiritual sense recognizes as substance only that which is imperishable and infinite.

Beginning with the objective universe, many philosophers, reasoning inductively from effect back to cause, ultimately arrive by way of atoms, ions or electrons, at what they call force or energy. Mrs. Eddy attributes to what she terms "mortal mind" all that seems to be material, evil and mortal. This term, "mortal mind," is used by Mrs. Eddy, as the best term available, to describe the false sense of intelligence and life that claims to exist as the attribute of God. But she explains that the real Mind and creator is not mortal but immortal; not human but divine. Thus the world of sense-perception is left without a divine cause. The troublesome realm of evil matter is left outside the realm of divine reality. It is found to have no real authority and no enduring substance. Of this fleeting, temporary sense of substance Paul said: "The things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal" (II Cor. IV, 18).

PAIN AND SUFFERING ILLUSIVE.

Because the mortal, material body is not conscious, it cannot, apart from the human mind, be painful or sore or sick. The human body separate from the human mind can have no sensation. It is obvious, then, that the sense of pain and suffering is in the human mind and not in the body. Many have doubtless had the experience of dreaming that they were in pain when the body was in what is regarded as a normal state. Christian Science shows that all suffering and disease is a dream from which the dreamer needs to be awakened. The first step in the direction of freedom from this evil dream of disease and mortality is to know that these evils are not of God. God never made anything that is not good. Further, since God is always good, cannot make anything evil for any purpose of tolerance its existence in any form.

The Christian Scientist is willing to admit that suffering and disease seem to exist but that neither often seems quite real and very painful. It does not mean that the human sense is false, but seeks to correct this false sense of things with the truth of being. He finds that by a process of substituting in consciousness ideas that are good for beliefs that are evil, he can free himself from the sense of pain and suffering, which is called sickness, as surely as he can, by a similar mental process, resist and overcome the temptation to sin. Evil, pain and disease are without divine authority of actual existence and cannot even seem to exist to one who is fully conscious of the allness and ever-presence of good.

WHY SUFFERING SHOULD BE OPPOSED.

The question is sometimes asked, "Since the Bible contains a record of human suffering, why does Christian Science, which is said to be founded upon the Scriptures, teach that suffering should be opposed?"

Christian Science is a restoration or rediscovery of primitive Christianity. It is based upon the life and works of Christ Jesus, who is the founder of Christianity. Christian Science, therefore, accepts Jesus as the master teacher. The question arises, "What was the attitude of Christ Jesus toward human suffering?" A study of the gospels reveals the fact that while the attitude of Jesus toward the sufferer was one of great compassion, he evidently regarded suffering and disease as illegitimate. He declared that he came not to destroy, but to fulfill. He came, in other words, to do the will of the Father, God, who is the source of all real law. We find that much of the ministry of Jesus consisted in his work of destroying sickness, suffering, sin and death. If Christ Jesus came to do the will of God, and spent his time largely in relieving mankind through the destruction of disease as well as of sin, then it can only be concluded that he regarded suffering as unlawful and contrary to the will of God.

Furthermore, Jesus said: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (John VIII, 32). The question occurs, "Free from what?" The answer is again found in the record of his works among men. It is recorded that he went about "doing good" and "healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." The conclusion again is that if the truth as taught by Christ Jesus makes free from sickness and disease, then these evils are the opposite of truth and should be opposed and cast out as being no part of the purpose and plan of God for man, who is created in His likeness. Christian Science teaches that the works of Jesus were done in accordance with divine law. It teaches, therefore, that the same works can be done again in the same way, for real law never varies in its operation.

DISEASE HAS A MENTAL CAUSE.

What of the experience called sickness, or disease? Practically all are familiar with the fact recognized and admitted by physicians, that certain kinds of disease have a mental cause. Christian Science declares that all disease has a mental cause.

Human emotions, such as fear, anger, worry, hatred, etc., are now said to produce poisonous conditions on or in the physical body. If this is so, may not many cases of chronic poisoning in the human system be traceable to a chronic disposition to elve away the cause? Is it not as reasonable to admit this as to revitalize the fact that acute fear immediately manifests itself in a blanched face? If one is obliged to admit the mental cause of some kinds of physical disease, why not agree with Christian Science that, primarily, all disease is due to a mental cause? This does not mean that all disease is the result of conscious fear or of wilful sin. Many types of disease are effects of latent fear, hereditary temperament, superstition, ignorance, or some of the generally unreciprocated beliefs of the human mind which seem to operate as law. Simply to name to be sick from one or more of these mental causes. Will drugs cure him? Is there any antidote that will destroy hatred, or any serum that will prevent fear? Nothing but the knowledge that God is Love and that man is the image of God is in reality nothing less than the expression of Love, and therefore cannot and does not fear or hate, will effect a permanent cure in such a case.

FEAR OVERCOME.

All that is real exists as the effect of an intelligent cause, divine Mind. One has only to look at a badly frightened person to see that he manifests little or no intelligence while under the sway of fear. Therefore, we may conclude that fear is not a manifestation of an intelligent cause. It is plain that if one could be free from fear it would be his greatest advantage. Many are ready to point out the evil effects of fear. They are even quick to urge their friends not to be afraid, but they are not always able to tell them why they have no need to fear.

Christian Scientists have discerned the fact that fear is not an attribute of God, are beginning to understand why it is no part of man, who is in the likeness of God. They reason that God is the only cause and is good. Fear is not good. Therefore it is not the effect of the one only cause and consequently is without actual existence. There is no fear in the universe of God and nothing in that universe of which man could be afraid. There is no good in fear, for "fear hath torment," hence there is no God in it, and no truth in it. Christian Scientists do not, however, claim to have demonstrated as yet that they are entirely immune from fear; but they are much less fearful than formerly, and consequently, much less subject to disease and disaster.

HEREDITY NOT LAW.

No more discouraging and distressing thought confronts mankind than the belief in hereditary transmission of disease or of certain evil tendencies and traits. When the so-called law of heredity seems to have resulted in a vigorous constitution and relatively good traits of mind and character, we are apt to rejoice that the individual has derived these from his progenitors. But when the inheritance is that of diseased physique or evil mentality, there is regret and despair in place of rejoicing.

If we are to admit that good tendencies can be transmitted by heredity, we shall also be obliged to admit that evil is likewise transmissible. But Mrs. Eddy has freed thousands from bondage to belief in hereditary transmission by her teaching that "heredity is not a law" (Science and Health, page 17). Christian Science teaches, as Jesus taught, that God is the only Father of man. It shows that in his true nature man is the offspring of Spirit. Man's origin being divine Mind and that Mind being infinitely good, man can have no evil heritage. His heritage is the heritage of good and of good only. He is therefore not subject to hereditary talent or contamination. Purity and perfection are man's divine right and are derived from his heavenly Father. Today in many instances Christian Science is healing so-called hereditary diseases and congenital defects through the understanding that there is no law of God to sustain them and that, therefore, they have no right to exist.

MAN-MADE LAWS NOT GOOD.

The entire category of beliefs, such as those that claim to control the effect of food, climate, contagion and many other generally accepted beliefs are being proved not to be real law. The understanding that God is the only law-maker allows at once that so-called material laws not being of Him, are not good. They are man-made, and have no real power over man. Take the question of climatic influence: Christian Science teaches that it is not the weather, but the belief about it, that makes climate either injurious or otherwise. Consequently it shows that right thinking will change wrong believing and free one from fear of climate or of its supposed effects.

Mrs. Eddy once treated a woman who breathed with difficulty when the wind was in the east. After treating her a few moments the breathing began to ease. The wind, however, continued to blow directly from the east. (See Science and Health, p. 184.) This proves that it was not the direction of the wind, but the belief about it, that had made this woman's breathing difficult before she was relieved by Christian Science treatment. It is evident that when the belief is in consciousness and that the mental process which substitutes the correct idea for the mistaken belief and its supposed penalty, is not at all affected by the state of the weather. This tends to show that real atmosphere is mental, or spiritual, as indicated by Paul when he said, "For in him (Spirit Mind) we live, and move, and have our being" (Acts XVII, 28).

CONTAGION NOT TO BE FEARED.

The beliefs about infection and contagion are constantly changing, but practically all physicians are in a calm and fearless attitude of thought in the great protection to the individual in times of epidemic or threatened epidemic of disease. Dr. Robert Collyer, the celebrated Unitarian minister, writing of his childhood experience and of his parents' faith, said, "The most powerful fever would break out in the cottage all about us, and decimate the neighbors, and they (his parents) were always at hand to help, going and coming, never thinking of changing their garments. Yet they never caught a fever, nor did any of their children, nor felt the slightest touch of fear."

It should be understood that the best "health insurance" one can have is, real presence of Mind, or the God-given ability to think truly at all times and under all circumstances.

HEALTH AND WEALTH UNIVERSAL.

Health, according to Christian Science, is universal. It is mental wholeness or completeness. It is spiritual perfection. It is reflected by the individual. It does not originate with him, nor does it belong to him more than to another. It is like the light—impersonal and universal. For one to have it does not prevent all from sharing it.

Real wealth or true substance is not only universal, but indivisible. For one to possess it does not make it necessary, or possible, that others should be deprived of it. Even in daily experience it is seen, from a purely human point of view, that those qualities or characteristics which make for true success are intelligent activity, faithful persistence, courage, honesty, fidelity, etc. Christian Science shows that these qualities, if enduring, are not personal, but on the contrary are attributes of the one infinite Mind, or God. Therefore they are universal and may be reflected and manifested by all. Thus all may be conscious of the only enduring substance, and to be conscious of its ever-presence is to reflect and manifest divine Love, which, Mrs. Eddy says, "is impartial and universal in its adaptation and bestowals." (Science and Health, p. 13.) So real wealth, or abundance, is as free as the sunshine and is universally available as truth. But the human selfishness has been too busy to see that which is finite and divisible—that which may be bought and sold, borrowed, leased and lost. Our greatest American poet, discriminating between the false and true sense of substance, said:

For a cap and bells our lives we pay,
Babbling we hwy with a whole soul's tasking;
"Tis heaven none that is given away,
"Tis only God may he had for the asking."
—Lowell.

Christ Jesus, while understanding the universal nature of good and that man as the son of God is eternally supplied with all good, nevertheless recognized that mankind needs food and raiment. But in pointing the true way to find sufficient for temporal needs he said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matthew VI, 33.) Right thinking brings a sense of abundance today as surely as it did two thousand years ago. It is well, however, to remember that Jesus did not say to seek first the things, and the kingdom of God would be added.

CHRIST, AND CHRIST JESUS.

Presently students of the gospels fail to make any distinction between the terms Christ and Jesus. They often consider these terms as being synonymous. Christ is the spiritual eternal, changeless, universal truth of God, which has been discerned to a greater or less extent in all ages, but which appeared in His perfection as an individual ideal in Christ Jesus. As the one who best understood and most perfectly demonstrated the Christ, Truth, in healing sickness and sin, Jesus was the Wayshower and Exemplar for mankind.

PRAYER AND ATONEMENT.

Christian Science teaches its adherents to "pray without ceasing," and constantly to seek a higher and better understanding of the true nature of God, and of man as His likeness. Furthermore, it requires the demonstration of this understanding in right thinking and right living. Such thinking results in the lessening of sin and disease. This is the practical attainment to which Mrs. Eddy refers as "the exemplification of man's unity with God." (Science and Health, p. 18.) Christian Scientists believe that in no other way can they realize the full import of "what has been mistakenly regarded as the vicarious atonement of Christ Jesus, but which was in fact the perfect demonstration of man's at-onement with God.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE AND MESMERISM.

Some who are unfamiliar with its teachings and practice suppose that Christian Science is in its nature akin to mesmerism or is some form of mental suggestion. Those who are familiar with the true nature of Christian Science know that it is quite unlike every form of mesmerism. It even differs from what is ordinarily referred to as "faith cure." While Jesus in his ministry often required faith of those who were seeking to be healed, and Christian Science teaches that faith is in itself a desirable quality, yet something more than the exercise of what may be termed "blind faith" is involved in the practice of true Christian Science. The "prayer of faith" as understood in Christian Science is in fact the prayer of spiritual understanding. This prayer is the exact opposite of that form of mental treatment which consists in the exercise of human will power or the effort of one person to control or influence the thoughts of another by means of mesmerism or mental suggestion.

The prayer or treatment of the Christian Scientist is based upon his spiritual discernment of the fact that there is but one Mind. The mesmerists' endeavors are based upon the belief that there are minds many, and that one of these many minds can influence another for good or evil. Here lies the danger of mesmerism or mental suggestion; whereas the safety of Christian Science practice consists in its entire dependence upon the power of one infinite Mind, the effect of which can be only good.

It will be seen that in depending upon the divine Mind, or God, to cast out and destroy the evils of sin and disease, the Christian Scientist is not endeavoring to hold his patient under any sort of so-called mental control. Nor is the Christian Scientist practicing "trickery" by means of thought transference or mental suggestion to change his patient's belief about sickness or disease. He is seeking through his spiritual understanding of the all-power of good to prove the unreality and powerlessness of evil—sin, fear, disease and death, thereby demonstrating man's freedom from such evil suggestions. There can be no reaction or other harmful effect from such treatment. To illustrate: Suppose one raises a window shade and lets the light of day into a darkened room, he does not feel that by so doing he has changed the darkness into light. Neither does he witness any conflict or strife between the light and darkness, for there is none. He merely has let the light come into the room that seemed dark and displace the sense of darkness, which is never anything more than the seeming absence of light. The same with the Mind in human consciousness destroying erroneous conditions of belief as peaceful and harmless as the action of light coming into a darkened room and dispelling the darkness.

MIND ALONE HEALS.

It would be entirely inconsistent with the Principle of Christian Science to attempt to combine its practice with the practice of medicine. To the extent that material means were employed by the metaphysician and to the extent that he compromised with material means, his dependence thereon to that extent would nullify his faith in the power of Mind as the healer of disease. By such methods the practitioner would become like the "Klondike divided against itself," which, Christ Jesus said, "is brought to desolation" (Matt. XIII, 25).

REASON AND REVELATION.

God said through Isaiah, "Come now, let us reason together," and Christian Scientists are beginning to understand that in extending this invitation to mankind God was not asking an impossible thing. Communion with the divine Mind which is called God is indeed possible to all who are on the plane of existence. This has been proved by successive revelations of truth to human kind through individuals whose spiritual perception was sufficiently clear to make it possible for them to become revelators. This successive revelation has culminated in this age with the discovery of Christian Science which its Discoverer says reconciles reason and revelation.

DISCOVERY AND DISCOVERER.

Those who have had experience in mountain climbing will recall how, after toiling up out of the narrow canyons of the canon along the winding trails, they have finally been able to reach the very summit of the range. Having attained this exalted viewpoint, they have paused to gaze upon the beauty of the panorama spread before them. There among the foothills nestles the village from which they have so lately made their way. Yonder through the valley winds the ever-winding river. On the other side of the valley stretches another range of mountains, its sun-capped peaks glistening in the sunlight.

Nothing has been a fief to the landscape since the traveler reached the summit, but he has attained an eminence which enables him to discern that which was already there. This experience of the traveler illustrates the phenomenon of spiritual discovery.

ery. The seer and prophet in the spiritual realm becomes such because of his ability to rise in consciousness above the narrowness and limitation of material thinking to the attitude of broad, spiritual vision. Thus he attains the point of view that enables him to comprehend the facts of being and reveal them to others. He does not add to that which is, but he discloses that which always was. This describes the experience of spiritual leaders of all times.

Mary Baker Eddy did not invent anything in her discovery of Christian Science. She did not add to that which already was. She discovered the principle underlying the spiritual healing of physical diseases by the prophets, by Christ Jesus, and by the early Christians. As the result of her discovery she was able to restore to the world not only the Science of healing but the Science of belief.

MRS. EDDY.

Mrs. Eddy was born in Bow, N. H., July 16, 1821. She received her early education from her brother, Albert Baker, a graduate of Dartmouth College, and at the private school of Dyer, N. H., and at the private school of Dyer, N. H. She was a thoughtful and religious woman, and was united with the Congregational church and remained a member of that denomination until her discovery of Christian Science in 1856. In 1874, having first demonstrated the practical work of her discovery, she wrote and published the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." In 1879 she organized the Christian Science Church, which was later reorganized as The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts. In 1881 Mrs. Eddy opened the Massachusetts Metaphysical College, the only institution of its kind having a charter from the Commonwealth. She wrote "Unity of Good," "Miscellaneous Writings," and other standard works on Christian Science. Mrs. Eddy established The Christian Science Publishing Society, which issues the denominational publications, including a daily newspaper, which publishes only that which is constructive and beneficial and which gives its readers a world-wide grasp of affairs.

Mrs. Eddy saw the fruition of her life-work and the extension of the movement which she founded in every part of the civilized world.

Mrs. Eddy has been declared by the Governor of her native State to have been New Hampshire's greatest woman, and truly she may be so regarded by reason of her achievements. But of all her wonderful works, that for which Christian Scientists revere and love her most is her discovery, and declaration, and demonstration of the life-giving truth that God is good. Therefore they say to you, "Acquaint now thyself with him, and he at peace" (Joh. xxi, 21). And for the purpose of becoming more intelligent acquainted with God as the infinite good and loving Principle of your being, they commend you to an earnest study of Mrs. Eddy's book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

This text-book of Christian Science is giving its students remarkable freedom from the besetments of evil and is bringing into their daily experience the practical proof that universal good is available to mankind in every hour of need. For this they are unexpressedly grateful, and because of this they are encouraged to hope and believe that you may also become students of the Scriptures in the new light thrown on them by this wonderful book, for they know that "thereby good shall come unto them."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Dr. F. J. Cheney's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and restoring nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for every case that fails to cure. Sent for list of testimonials, address: F. J. Inactive Kidneys Cause Disease

"I shall not soon forget the benefits I derived from the use of Foley Kidney Pills."—A. A. Godfrey, Forest Grove, Oregon.

Too much work and too little rest seem to have about the same effect on persons past middle age. Proper action of the kidneys is necessary to good health. They act as a filter and remove from the blood poisonous waste matter which if permitted to remain in the system leads to many complications. Many nervous, tired, run-down men and women suffer from pains in the back and sides, dizziness, bladder weakness, sore muscles and stiff joints and fail to realize that rheumatism, diabetes or even Bright's disease may result.

If you have cause to believe that your kidneys are weak, disordered or inactive, you should act immediately. Foley Kidney Pills have been used by young, middle aged and old with complete satisfaction. They act quickly and surely and have given relief in cases of ten years' standing.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—
Benjamin Franklin.

CARE and practice are the chief requisites for success in the home roasting of coffee. The roasting may be done in the oven, but probably the beginner may find it easier to watch the process and prevent burning if the top of the stove or gas burner is used.

A heavy frying pan with a lid will probably be the most easily available utensil, although many coffee connoisseurs declare that contact with metal of any kind in roasting, grinding or infusing causes deterioration of flavor.

Such enthusiasts insist on having their coffee roasted in heavy earthen pans, pounded in a marble or earthen mortar and infused in an earthen coffee pot. Certainly such coffee is delicious, but is out of question for most of us. In any case avoid tin in dealing with coffee. An aluminum frying pan would be best.

Wash one pound of raw coffee berries in cold water, let dry on a sieve, spread thinly in a heavy pan, then set over the gas, turned quite low, and heat gradually, stirring and shaking occasionally for about fifteen minutes or until yellow; then cover and increase the heat, shaking thoroughly until all the berries are a deep, even cinnamon or chestnut color and have a sort of oily appearance. One hurried berry will spoil your coffee, for particular drinkers.

If you like egg in your coffee you may beat one up and add it when the coffee has cooled somewhat, but is still warm, though not hot. Beat with the coffee until every berry is glossy and coated with egg. The egg dries and helps to preserve the flavor, as well as to clear the coffee if made by the hollid method.

If drip coffee—which, of course, is far more wholesome—is preferred the egg should not be used. French coffee roasters sometimes add about two level teaspoonsful of clarified butter to every pound of roasted coffee and about one level teaspoonful of sugar. These are added while the final browning is being given. Tastes differ as to whether the addition of either, both or neither is best.

Keep the coffee in air tight tins and grind only as required. A little warming in the oven or over the fire immediately before grinding tends to freshen the flavor. Be sure to measure the coffee carefully, so as to secure a uniform brew.

ENTERTAINMENT KINK.

How to Give a Cafeteria Party, Making the Guests Do the Waiting.

After all the guests had assembled in the library they were invited to come into the dining room through a small door, which obliged them to enter one by one. At their right they passed a table heaped high with black enameled waiters, to which each helped himself or herself in passing.

Still standing in line, they counted the picturesque bills of fare posted around the room and, having made up their minds as to choice of the various goodies, helped themselves from the array of dishes spread on a narrow table extending the length of the room and presided over by a trio of young people attired in the extreme of waiters' uniforms. Having filled their trays to their satisfaction, they gathered the necessary table silver, and as they passed slowly from the low French windows out on to the glass enclosed, heated and lighted veranda each was handed his gay paper napkin, one to go under the tray and an individual one numbered to indicate table. These napkins had, of course, been numbered in duplicate, and one did not know until he had found his table who his partner was going to be. Each little table was decorated with a gay posy and flanked with a pitcher of ice water and two tumblers. The veranda was decorated with garlands of electric bulbs dropped into Japanese lanterns.

After much merry-making all the lively crowd was seated, only leaving their trays to return to the table for second helps for themselves or partners of the delicious chicken salad, shrimp omelets or rasp rolls.

When the first course was entirely finished the proprietor (hostess) asked each youth to return napkins and trays of used dishes to the dumb waiter, while she again distributed the napkins in twos. When the youths returned the numbers on their fresh napkins told them that they must seek partners with numbers corresponding and get for them the cream and cake which by this time was dished and waiting on the long table.

Still another change of partners was effected when the coffee and mints were distributed, and the affair passed off pleasantly, terminating in a jolly veranda dance.

Ironwork in India.
India was the first country which turned iron into weapons. Persia borrowed the art from India. The Rigveda, which is the oldest record in the world, gives evidence of this. So do also the Astras and Sastras of the Dhanurveda, and during the early part of the Christian era the Indian blade was the most used throughout the eastern and western world. This art reached its greatest perfection in northern India, the Punjab, Nepal, Tajputana, Gujarat and other provinces, where they still make beautiful arms.

COUNTY FAIR SEPT. 7-8-9-10

Secretary Brintnall Urges People to Co-operation With Officials

Many New Features Have Been Added This Year—Grange Day September Eight

You are doubtless interested in the progress and possibilities of Northern Michigan, therefore you should come in contact with its many citizens while you carefully study the choicest specimens of their labor and skill as shown in at the varied exhibits the thirty-first annual county fair.

In addition to the individual exhibits of cattle, swine, and sheep that will compete for the same liberal premiums as offered last year, there will be shown a special exhibit of the County Poor Farm stock. The Western Michigan Development Bureau also is expected to make a display with a packing demonstration in connection.

The corn contest in which $50.00 in gold is offered in premiums for the best bushel of yellow dent corn grown in Charlevoix and Antrim counties, should prove interesting even though the season is extremely backward for the corn crop. The newly added Class 3 in the vegetable division "Collection of Large Vegetables" should attract attention.

In every department an effort has been made to make the fair this year "The Best Ever." Loyal cooperation of all wide-awake, progressive, public spirited citizens already assures unusual success. If you are interested in educational matters you will find the school department of particular interest. The innovations in this exhibit will appeal to you and you will be impressed with the practical trend of public school instruction. If you are interested in the many useful articles of refinement and original design that lend comfort and charm to the home, the fancy work division will compel your attention. The culinary department will also be crowded with tempting products of the housewife's skill. Every division will have new and attractive features. If one thing does not interest you, you will be certain to find something else that you may enjoy.

If you are a lover of music your harmonic sense will be favorably impressed by music furnished by different bands each day throughout the fair. If you are a base ball fan, the hotly contested games that are now being arranged for will please you. If you enjoy splendid free attractions, our program will more than repay you for the trouble and expense of your daily attendance.

Trevor's Seals will perform twice daily, accomplishing many wonderful feats with almost unbelievable skill. Those who have never seen a number of trained seals at work should not miss the opportunity of witnessing these high-class acts and all who have seen them will be anxious to do so again.

Copeland, Smith and Morzello are performers that have always given the best of satisfaction and will render three acts daily. One trampoline bar act, one Roman ring act, and one comedy grotesque act. The Aerial Stunts, two men and one lady, will perform five skillful and artistic acts daily, viz., single trapeze, breakaway ladder, triple tight wire, sailor perch, and comedy contortion. These pleasing acts will be alternated with the several heats of the races which follow:

Wednesday, Sept. 8th. PURSE
2:45 Class, Trot or Pace, $125.00
2:10 Class, Trot or Pace, 125.00

1/2 Mile Running Race, 50.00
Ladies Race, (horse to be harness, hitched and driven one-half mile) 10.00
(These races are subject to change by committee)

Grange day will be observed Wednesday, Sept. 8th. A prominent speaker will deliver an address and the program throughout the day will be of the highest order. Every agriculturist and citizen should be present grange day.

"School Day," as usual, will be on Thursday, Sept. 9th. Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris in response to repeated and urgent invitation, has consented to attend and deliver an address if there is nothing serious to prevent. This means that the Governor will come if possible and that every citizen that has warm blood in his veins regardless of race, class or political creed should be present to give the chief executive of our state a splendid welcome. The addresses will probably be made directly in front of the grand-stand, to which free admittance will be granted during each address.

The last day of the fair will be complete in every particular with variation enough to make it worth your while to attend. Each portion of the daily programs will be plainly announced so that no misunderstanding or disappointment may occur. With your interest, your attendance, and last but not least, your loyal cooperation our 1915 Fair should surpass all previous exhibitions.

TAKEN TO PETOSKEY

Miss Lucy Bacon Who Was Seriously Burned Will Receive Treatment There.

Miss Lucy Bacon, the 16 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Bacon, who had her clothes burned from her body in a fire at their home May 18, was taken to Petoskey last Saturday where she will receive treatment at Lockwood hospital.

It will be remembered that the girl was nearly burned to death. Her back was burned to a crisp and the front of her body burned and blistered in a horrible manner.

Recently a subscription was taken up at the Beach Hotel among the guests, who donated liberally for the relief of the child. The children of the hotel also put on a benefit entertainment for the girl and raised over $50.00. The entire fund raised amounted to $201.50.

Mrs. J. S. Baker took the girl to the hospital Saturday and was accompanied by Dr. E. Shield of Cincinnati, who is a guest at the hotel this season. Dr. Shield is an expert skin specialist. The girl will receive a treatment known as the "water bath" with hopes of giving her permanent relief and a possible cure.

STEAMER PIERCE SPRINGS A LEAK

Now Floating Around in Lake Michigan in Water-logged Condition.

Was on Way to This Port from Fox Island With Cargo of Lath—Crew Lost Clothing.

Sunday morning the Steamer Pierce left this port for the Fox Island to bring back a load of lath. The boat was loaded and left the south Fox Island about 12:15 with 162,000 feet of lath aboard. When out about ten miles from the island it was discovered that the boat had sprung a leak. The captain and crew put out all syphons but could not keep the ship clear. They immediately turned about to return to the island and when but two miles from the shores of the island the boat went down. The captain and the crew took to the life boat and reached land in safety. Later they were picked up by a passing fishing tug and taken to Sutton's Bay, where the captain W. E. Knight took the train to Traverse City and thence to Charlevoix. When the captain left the island the boat was still drifting about and as soon as the wind ceased blowing he took a tug from this port and will try to return with the boat to this city.

Besides Captain Knight, the members of the crew were Sam Simmons, George Dickie and Arthur Bennett. All the men left their clothes aboard the ship escaping with only what they were wearing at the time of the settling of the boat. Captain Knight states he was carrying no heavier load than usual. The lath in the hold of the boat seems to keep it afloat.

OPEN DAY AT LIBRARY

Annual Event to Take Place Tuesday, August 24—People Urged to Attend.

During the present week the board of education has mailed over a thousand letters to the citizens and summer visitors of Charlevoix, urging them to attend the annual open day, Tuesday, August 24.

The object of the day is to have our citizens visit the library, get more acquainted, and enlist the interest of all in the great benefits to be derived from an institution of this character.

Each year there has been a marked increase of patrons, and it is hoped by the board that a greater interest can be obtained by the holding of these annual open days. The invitation is extended to all—make it a point to call during the afternoon or evening.

The Ladies of St. Mary's church will hold a Baked Goods Sale and serve lunch Saturday, Aug. 21, in the Ayers building. Adv. 33t.

ALL HUNTERS MUST OBTAIN LICENSE UNDER NEW GAME LAWS

Unless You Confine Your Operations On Your Own Land—Proceeds Under New Measure to Be Used By State Game, Fish and Forest Fire Department—Boys Under 17 Exempt.

Jos. E. Baylis, traveling auditor of State Game, Fish and Forest Fire Department has made the following statements regarding the new game laws.

He said the change in game laws requiring every person hunting off their own enclosed lands to secure hunting license would do much toward the conservation of game and fish. It is estimated he says that 100,000 licenses will be issued this year. Wisconsin has had a similar law for several years and they annually issue about 150,000 licenses. In Michigan 90 per cent of the license money goes to the State Game, Fish and Forest Fire Commission to use.

We give a synopsis of the digest of the game laws issued by the department containing the items of most interest to our readers.

Wall-eyed pike, blue gills, sunfish, perch, crappies and rock bass are now protected fish as well as all species of trout and bass. These fish cannot be bought or sold and hotel proprietors and resort keepers are admonished that that neither these nor any other protected fish can be served to guests where a charge is made for the service; provided that fish caught by guests may be served to them at their request.

HIT BY AUTO

Harry Schramm, Jr. of Cincinnati, Hurt on Dixon Avenue Monday Afternoon.

Monday afternoon while riding a bicycle on Dixon avenue, Harry Schramm of Cincinnati, who is spending the summer with his parents at the Elston cottage, was struck by the auto driven by Charles Emrey.

The boy was riding his bicycle, his head resting on his arms, paying no attention to the road, and while zigzagging back and forth across the street he was overtaken by Mr. Emrey. As the child rode to the side of the street, Mr. Emrey saw a clear right of way and attempted to pass the boy. Just as he started to go by, the youngster turned directly in front of the car. The driver of the auto tried in every way to avoid the accident and in so doing was forced into the curb where he stopped directly in front of a telephone pole.

Charles Howard, assistant chief of police, who witnessed the accident, rushed to the child's assistance and took him in a passing auto bus to the office of Dr. Wilkinson, where his injury was cared for. Both of the boy's legs were scratched up and a gash cut over the left eye. Two stitches were taken to close the wound. The child was more scared than injured, although the bruises will have their pains and aches.

COUNTY I. O. O. F. BASKET PICNIC

Annual Event to Be Held This Year at Horton Bay August 31.

Invitation Extended to All Members of Order and Rebeckahs of County.

Plans were completed for the annual basket picnic of the Charlevoix County I. O. O. F. Picnic association at a meeting held at Boyne City Tuesday evening.

The invitation of the Horton Bay lodge to hold the annual event at that place was accepted and the date set for the big day is Tuesday, August 31. Committees were appointed from Boyne City, Charlevoix, East Jordan, Boyne Falls and Horton Bay to make the final arrangements and take care of the matter of transportation.

It was decided to prepare a program, and secure prominent speakers to address the big crowd sure to be present. During the afternoon it is also planned to have a parade and every member is urged to "get in line." R. M. Cory of Boyne City was named as marshal of the day.

One of the biggest attractions of the day will be a ball game between members of the order from Boyne City and Horton Bay against those of Charlevoix and East Jordan. Other amusement will be provided, as well as refreshments. The success of the day greatly depends upon the attendance and interest shown, and every member of the order is urged to make himself a committee of one to get out and hustle. Bring well filled baskets—also bring the family and your friends.

DEER LAKE THE BANNER GRANGE

Pomona Grange Meeting at Ironton Was Well Attended

J. C. Ketchum and D. E. McClure Speakers of the Day—Ironton Good Entertainers.

By boat, automobile and farmer's conveyances, Grangers from all over the county arrived at the meeting of Pomona Grange held last Tuesday at Ironton, some time before the hour of calling the meeting to order, and the seating room was taken up.

J. E. Chew, master of Pomona Grange, called the meeting to order promptly at 2:00 p. m. The session opened by a song by the grange, followed by invocation by Sister Bears of Ellsworth. Next in order was the address of welcome by the master of Ironton Grange, which was responded to by the presiding officer of the day. This was followed by a song by Mrs. Crant Hammond, after which the chairman introduced the speaker for the afternoon, Mr. John C. Ketchum, grand master of the State Grange. Mr. Ketchum took for his subject, "Grange Progress." He was very enthusiastic, and certainly optimistic. His talk was right to the point and everyone present was pleased with the opportunity of hearing him.

This concluded the afternoon session after which the grange was called to order for a short business session, and then adjourned for supper.

In the meanwhile Mr. D. E. McClure of Lansing arrived. The evening session was called to order at 7:30; with a song by the grange, after which the chairman introduced Mr. McClure, assistant secretary of the state board of health, who gave an address on "Greater Grange Efficiency and Anti-Tuberculosis." Mr. McClure is thoroughly imbued with his subject, and gave a very interesting address.

This was followed by a short address by Mr. Ketchum. Both gentlemen are speakers of state wide reputation, and the grangers of Charlevoix county were fortunate in having such able men at their Pomona meeting.

After a short recess grange again opened for a business session in the fourth degree. The committee on subordinate granges reported Deer Lake the banner grange for the past quarter.

As the county grange convention meets at Maple Grove in October, and the Pomona charter is at Peninsula grange, the long established custom to hold the Pomona election at Peninsula grange, which occurs at the November meeting, it was decided to meet with Peninsula on November 18.

The sentiment expressed by those present was that the meeting was the best held for some time. The patrons at Ironton are to be congratulated for their kind hospitality.

R. P. Schwerin
On the Seamen's Bill

The American plowmen are interested in sea commerce. It is expensive and likewise humiliating to have to salute a foreign flag every time a farmer wants to ship a bushel of wheat, a bale of cotton or a pound of farm products across the ocean. The American farmer is entitled to the protection of his flag in sending his products across the sea, and Congress should give such encouragement to shipping interests as is necessary to meet foreign competition in ocean commerce. A recent bill known as the Seamen's Bill became a law under the President's signature and Mr. R. P. Schwerin, vice-president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, when asked to define this law and outline its effect upon American steamship lines, said in part:

"The bill provides that no ship of any nationality shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than seventy-five per centum of which, in each department thereof, is able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, not unless forty per centum in the first year, forty-five per centum in the second year, fifty per centum in the third year, fifty-five per centum in the fourth year after the passage of this Act, and thereafter sixty-five per centum of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, are of a rating not less than able seamen.

"The overseas trade of the world is competitive, therefore the original cost of the ship and the operation of the ship have to be reckoned with the keen competition of these rival nations with one another. The Oriental sailor is obedient and competent and is the cheapest sailor in the world. It is therefore manifestly clear that if this law applied to all nationalities in the transpacific traffic, all would be on the same economic basis, but it works a single hardship to all the ships of the world, except the Japanese and American ships, and with the latter it works two hardships. With the European, the cost of constructing a ship is no higher than that of constructing a Japanese ship, but if they had to provide European crews, while the Japanese operated with Japanese crews, the condition of competition would be such that they could not overcome the handicap and they would be driven off. But the American ship would have to contend not only with the tremendous increase of cost of wage in the substitution of the European crew for the Chinese crew, but also the greater initial cost of the ship. As the Japanese have now done away with their European officers and Japanese crews, all of whom speak a common language, there is no difficulty for them to comply with all the conditions of the bill and continue their Japanese crews, with Oriental wages.

"The law, therefore, instead of assisting the American ship, adds another heavy burden, while it places none whatever upon the Japanese ship, but, on the contrary, turns over to the Japanese the traffic of the Pacific Ocean, which the American ship is forced to forego by act of Congress of the United States."

COMING BACK To Charlevoix, Michigan UNITED DOCTORS SPECIALIST WILL AGAIN BE AT THE Hotel Charlevoix Monday, September 6, 1915 ONE DAY ONLY Hours, 10:00 A. M. to 8:00 P. M.

Remarkable Success of These Talented Physicians
in the Treatment of Chronic Diseases
Offer Their Services Free of Charge

The United Doctors, licensed by the State of Michigan for the treatment of deformities and all nervous and chronic diseases of men, women and children, offer to all who call on this trip, consultation, examination, advice free, making no charge whatever, except the actual cost of treatment. All that is asked in return for these valuable services is that every person treated will state the result obtained to their friends and thus prove to the sick and afflicted in every city and locality, that at last treatments have been discovered that are reasonably sure and certain in their effect.

These doctors are among America's leading stomach and nerve specialists and are experts in the treatment of chronic diseases and so great and wonderful have been their results that in many cases it is hard to find the dividing line between skill and miracle.

Diseases of the stomach, intestines, liver, blood, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, kidneys, or bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, diabetes, bed-wetting, tape worm, leg ulcers, weak lungs and those afflicted with long-standing, deep seated, chronic diseases, that have baffled the skill of the family physicians, should not fail to call. Deafness often has been cured in sixty days.

According to their system no more operations for appendicitis, gall stones, tumors, gonor, piles, etc., as these diseases are treated without operation or hypodermic injection.

They were among the first in America to earn the name of "Bloodless Surgeons," by doing away with the knife, with blood and with all pain in the successful treatment of these dangerous diseases.

If you have kidney or bladder troubles bring a two ounce bottle of your urine for chemical analysis and microscopic examination.

No matter what your ailment may be, no matter what others may have told you, no matter what experience you may have had with other physicians, it will be to your advantage to see them at once. Have it forever settled in your mind. If your case is incurable they will give you such advice as may relieve and stay the disease.

Do not put off this duty you owe to yourself or friends or relatives who are suffering because of your sickness, as a visit at this time may help you.

Worn-out and run-down men or women, no matter what your ailments, consult them. It costs you nothing.

Remember, this last free offer is for this visit only.

TEMPERANCE NOTES
(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

WATER FOR CHRISTENING.

There seems to be some confusion on the part of certain good people concerning the attitude of the W. C. T. U. with regard to the christening of ships with champagne. The Outlook said editorially: "The opposition of extreme temperance advocates has always been difficult to understand." It contends that inasmuch as "a bottle smashed on the bow of a battleship is one bottle that can never be drunk, such an event ought to be regarded as another blow to the consumption of liquor."

Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, being asked to give the white-ribboners' viewpoint, said: "Our friends, the nonextremists, are taking a narrow and superficial view of the question. They are losing sight of the symbolism of the rite itself. Consider the root meaning of the word christening. One of the dictionary definitions of to christen is, 'to name, as a ship by a ceremony likened to baptism.' Always baptism in the Christian economy has been with water. If in days gone by spirituous liquors were supposed to give long life and to bring good luck, the revelations of science have thoroughly exploded that theory. Water is a symbol of life, alcohol a symbol of disease, destruction and death, the enemy of life and of efficiency; hence the christening of any ship with champagne is an absurdity and an anachronism."

FUTURE OF KING ALCOHOL.

The Russian minister of finance offers $362,500 in prizes for the discovery of new methods for utilizing alcohol. Three prizes totaling $25,000, will be given for the discovery of new denaturizing substances, the improvements to be such as will guarantee a general use and make alcohol absolutely unfit for use as a beverage. Twenty-one prizes, totaling $337,500, are offered for suggestions for adding to and improving the uses of spirits for heating, lighting, motive power and in the industrial branches of chemical technology. The largest single prize of $37,000 (supplemented by two other prizes totaling $50,000) is offered for an invention relating to the utilization of spirits in internal combustion engines; the production of such substances as vinegar, ether, chloroform, dissolving agents, fuel, lighting, etc.

Russia's wise and practical policy with regard to King Alcohol points to the time when that most powerful enemy of the human race from the beginning of time shall be transformed into valued servant and friend. Thus do we become "more than conquerors."

STUDY OF ALCOHOL.

That the dangers of alcohol should be emphasized in every school in the land, was the opinion voiced by Dr. G. D. Cameron of Ohio, speaking before the bureau of sanitary science of the American Institute of Homeopathy. While the schools had touched upon the subject somewhat, he said, it remained for the European war to set forth "the true relation of this demoralizer of human efficiency."

"The utter desolation alcohol creates in the home makes it like war," he asserted. "Like war, it digs the untimely grave. It pauperizes. Through heredity it creates the neuritis. It daunts and degenerates wherever it comes in contact with the human tissue. It paves the way for tuberculosis and is first assistant in disseminating the diseases of vice. Yet the schools do not manifest the strong interest in this subject which its importance in social science deserves. Let the forces of enlightenment array themselves where the enemies of society are making their strongest attack. The schools should teach that good health is life's greatest asset."

CONDEMN THE SALOON.

The Catholic Total Abstinence union at its annual convention in Milwaukee voted to join hands with the Dry Chicago federation and appointed a committee to co-operate with that organization. "The saloon," declared the Catholics, "is engaged in destroying civilized society. So long as it confined its destroying influence to the male portion of our population temporizing remedies and expedients were first to be thought of, but since the alcohol octopus has enmeshed the whole family in its slimy tentacles with commercialized vice, a symptom of the alcoholic blight, with womanhood dishonored and motherhood destroyed, the manhood that remains untaught must arise in defense till the whole bad business is swept from our land."

SOCIAL AND CIVIC PROBLEM.

William A. Pinkerton has said that all of us are more or less potentially criminal, and that this innate tendency is kept submerged by most men through habits of temperate self-control.

That the city and state are responsible for deliberately breaking down the resisting power of their citizens there no longer can be any question. In other words, the problem of crime is not merely a matter of individual responsibility. Its prevention is a question of social and civic obligation.

PEG O' MY HEART

By J. Hartley Manners

A Comedy of Youth Founded by Mr. Manners on His Great Play of the Same Title—Illustrations From Photographs of the Play

Copyright, 1915, by Dodd, Mead & Company

SYNOPSIS.

Frank O'Connell, young Irish patriot, is shot and wounded by British soldiers while making a home rule speech. He is aided by Angela Kingsnorth, an English society girl, who defends him.

Angela takes O'Connell to her brother's home and helps to nurse him. He recovers, and she and the girl become fast friends.

O'Connell when well is sent to jail for disturbing the peace. He finally writes Angela that he has finished his sentence.

O'Connell and Angela wed. She was espoused the Irish cause. Her brother, a member of parliament, is very angry.

The happy couple comes to America to live. A daughter is born to them. Angela's brother refuses to have the couple in any way. Angela dies.

O'Connell names his daughter Margaret and calls her "Peg." O'Connell receives a most important letter from England, which perplexes him.

O'Connell allows Peg to visit England at her uncle's request. The elder Kingsnorth's heart had finally softened toward his dead sister's little girl.

Peg goes to the home of the Chichester family in England at the direction of Mr. Hawkes, Kingsnorth's attorney, as Kingsnorth suddenly dies.

She first meets Ethel Chichester and Brent, a married man in love with Ethel. She interrupts them by accident in a secret meeting.

Ethel is enraged at Peg and haughtily dismisses her from the drawing room, sending her to the servants' quarters. The Chichesters have lost their money in a bank failure.

Hawkes arrives and reads the Kingsnorth will. It leaves most of the fortune to Peg and offers liberal pay to any one who will undertake her education and social training.

Mrs. Chichester finally agrees to bring up Peg in return for the money promised, although she openly despises the shabby young girl.

CHAPTER XIV.

Peg in England.

"HOW long have you been here?" Angela asked Ethel of Peg.
"Sure I only came in this minute," said Peg innocently and with a little note of fear. She was not accustomed to fine looking, splendidly dressed young ladies like Ethel.

"What do you want?" demanded the young lady.

"Nothing," said Peg reassuringly.

"Nothing?" echoed Ethel, growing angrier every moment.

"Not a thing. I was just told to wait," said Peg.

"Who told you?"

"A gentleman," replied Peg.

"What gentleman?" asked Ethel sharply and suspiciously.

"Just a gentleman," Peg, after fumbling nervously in her pocket, produced all to her liking. She wished Mr. Hawkes would come and get her out of a most embarrassing position. But until he did so she was not going to obey his instructions. He told her to say nothing, so nothing would she say.

Ethel turned abruptly to Brent and found that gentleman looking at the odd little stranger somewhat admiringly.

"You are a beautiful specimen of a young woman," said Peg quickly.

"You say you have only been here a minute?"

"That's all," replied Peg—"just a minute."

"Where were you when you came in?"

"I was here."

Ethel could scarcely conceal her rage.

"Did you hear what she said?"

"Some of it—not much," said Peg.

"What did you hear?"

"Please don't—it's so hot this morning," said Peg, with no attempt at imitation, just as if she were stalling a simple, ordinary occurrence.

Ethel flushed scarlet. Brent smiled.

"You refuse to say why you're here or who you are?" Ethel again asked.

"It isn't me that's refusing! All the gentleman said to me was: 'Go to the place that's written down on the card and sit down there and wait. And that's all ye do.'"

Ethel again turned to the perplexed Brent.

"Extraordinary!" And Brent shook his head.

The position was unbearable. Ethel decided instantly how to relieve it.

She looked freely down at the forlorn looking little intruder and said:

"The servants' quarters are at the back of the house."

"Are they?" asked Peg without moving and not in any way taking the statement to refer to her.

"And I may save you the trouble of waiting by telling you we are quite provided with servants. We do not need any further assistance."

Peg just looked at Ethel and then bent down over Michael. Ethel's last shot had struck home. Poor Peg was cut through to her soul. How she longed at that moment to be back home with her father in New York. Before she could say anything Ethel continued:

"If you insist on waiting, kindly do so there."

Peg looked Michael up in her arms, collected once more her packages and walked to the windows. Again she heard the cold, hard tones of Ethel's voice speaking to her:

"Follow the path to your right until you come to a door. Knock and ask permission to wait there, and for your future guidance go to the back door of a house and ring. Don't walk unannounced into a private room."

Peg tried to explain.

"Ye see, ma'am, I didn't know. All the gentleman said was, 'Go there and wait.'"

"That will do."

"I'm sorry I disturbed ye." And she glanced at the embarrassed Brent.

"That will do," said Ethel finally.

Poor Peg nodded and wandered off through the windows sore at heart.

She went down the path until she reached the door Ethel mentioned.

She knocked at it. While she is waiting for admission we will return to the fortunes of the rudely disturbed lovers.

Ethel turned indignantly to Brent as the little figure went off down the path.

"Outrageous!" she cried.

"Poor little wretch!" Brent walked to the windows and looked after her.

"She's quite pretty."

Ethel looked understandingly at him.

"Is she?"

"In a shabby sort of way. Didn't you think so?"

Ethel glared coldly at him.

"I never noticed the lower enders. You apparently do."

"Oh, yes—often. They're very interesting—at times." He strained to get a last glimpse of the intruder.

"Do you know, she's the strangest little apparition!"

"She's only a few yards away if you care to follow her!"

Her tone brought Brent up sharply. He turned away from the window and found Ethel, arms folded, eyes flashing, waiting for him. Something in her manner alarmed him. He had come too far.

"Why, Ethel," he said as he came toward her.

"Suppose my mother had walked in here—or Alaric—instead of that creature? Never do such a thing again!"

"I was carried away," he hastened to explain.

"Kindly exercise a little more restraint. You had better know now." There was a duality of dismissal in her tone as she passed him and crossed to the great staircase. He followed her:

"May I call tomorrow?"

"No," she answered decidedly; "not tomorrow."

"The following day, then," he urged.

"Perhaps."

"Remember, I build on you."

She looked scornfully at him.

"I suppose we are worthy of each other."

Through the open windows came the sound of voices.

"Gai!" she said imperatively. And she passed on up the stairs. Brent went rapidly to the door. Before either he could open it or Ethel go out of sight Alaric burst in through the windows.

"Hello, Brent!" he cried cheerfully. "Disturbed?" And he caught Ethel as she was about to disappear. "Or you, Ethel?"

Ethel turned and seated herself with her little white lap dog clasped in her hands, then answered coolly:

"You're not disturbed me."

"I'm just going," said Brent.

"Well, wait a moment." And Alaric turned to the window and beckoned to some one on the path, and in from the garden came Mr. Montgomery Hawkes.

"Come in," said the energetic Alaric.

"Come in, Ethel. I want you to meet Mr. Hawkes. Mr. Hawkes—my sister; Mr. Brent—Mr. Hawkes." Having sat imperiously introduced every one, he said to Ethel: "See if the master's well enough to come down, like a dear, will ye? This gentleman has come from London to see her. I've mind? An' come back yourself, too, like an angel. He says he has some business that concerns the whole family."

Alaric bustled Hawkes into a chair and then seized the somewhat uncomfortable Brent by an unwilling hand and shook it warmly as he asked:

"Must you go?"

"Yes," replied Brent, with a sigh of relief.

Alaric dashed to the door and opened it as though to speed the visitor on his way.

"So sorry I was out when you called," said Alaric merrily. "Run in any time."

REFORMERS for revenue who are looking for something wasteful to reform, might turn their eyes to the demon auto. All sorts of statistics showing the ruinous trail of the automobile might be gleaned. Men steal in order to ride on rubber tires. Homes are ruined by midnight joy rides with festive females. Hundreds of persons each year are killed and thousands are injured in auto accidents. Look at this bill as an example of the enormous waste of money for autos, which might be spent for shoes, clothing, groceries and bread. On June 1 of the current year there were 2,000,000 automobiles in use in the United States. To run this number of cars requires $130,000,000 worth of gasoline, $8,000,000 of lubricating oil, $182,000,000 worth of tires, $100,000,000 worth of accessories, $200,000,000 for garage charges, and $100,000,000 for repairs. Add to this the value of 600,000 cars purchased during the year and we have a total of $1,180,000,000 spent in one year on automobiles. This tremendous amount of wasted money would furnish the reformer with plenty ammunition. The trouble in getting people to listen, however, would be that the people who ride in automobiles spend their own money for that pleasure and don't care to spend it in any other way. Usually they are well clothed, and if they spent on bread and meat what they spend on their autos, they'd die of over-eating.

THERE are but two classes of merchants—those who advertise and those who do not. The man who advertises has the best of the deal. He keeps himself before the public, he keeps his wares before the public, and he keeps their quality and price uppermost in the public mind. People talk about a man who advertises because they know he has something worth advertising, or he wouldn't advertise. It is possible for a man to conduct a profitable business by ignoring the advantages of persistent and intelligent advertising, but the day has long since passed when it is necessary to employ lengthy arguments to prove to a merchant that advertisements augment a big percent age of his profits. The experiences of Charlevoix's successful merchants are the strongest proofs of the advantages of newspaper advertising.

At the close of business, Saturday, August 7, the net balance in the general fund of the United States treasury was $66,744,940 as compared with $131,627,468 on the same date two years ago, under Republican laws. The deficit for the present fiscal year from July 1 to August 7 was $18,452,200.

St. Peter: Well, what have you to say for yourself? You'll have to hurry.

Applicant: I've been a model man. In my journey through life I've been as solemn as I could. I always insisted that others adapt their standards of propriety to mine.

St. Peter: U-m. In other words, you wanted them to be as sanctimonious as yourself?

Applicant: I opposed baseball, band concerts, minstrel shows, the movies, dances and like frivolities I also opposed.

St. Peter: Because you didn't enjoy them, or because you thought that they were wrong?

Applicant: Well, of course, I couldn't enjoy them, so they ought to have been wrong. I opposed almost everything on general principles.

St. Peter: That is to say you wanted nobody else to enjoy life. You are the man who put the "goo" in "lugubrious."

Applicant: I did more than this. I had bills passed prohibiting a great number of things. I legislated against many amusements.

St. Peter: I gather from that you were a reformer.

Applicant: I was more than a reformer. I investigated vice. I revealed in exposing wickedness in others.

St. Peter: And had the time of your life doing it. I suppose. Well, I hope you will be comfortable in your new quarters, for I see you don't melt easily. Come back, say, in 100 years, and I'll see if I can find a place for you a few thousand degrees cooler.

THEATRICAL

Freckles.

A dramatization of Gene Stratton-Porter's "Freckles," has proven that there is no limit of success to good, clean, moral song plays. The Broadway Amusement Company first saw the possibilities of Mrs. Porter's work, which now stands as one of the most substantial successes in the past decade of theatrical history.

As a love story, it is full of real sentiment; as a story of adventure, it is positively gripping. In fact, in all the elementary features, there is no character or set of characters, which have been on the American stage for years, so intensely interesting, nor has there been a more beautiful stage picture than is depicted in this new song play.

The Broadway Amusement Company have given "Freckles" a perfect stage investiture, and there will be found nothing wanting in the matter of scenery, accessories, music or cast, when this charming song play is presented at the Charlevoix Theatre, Wednesday, August 25.

The young lawyer didn't like the minister, and so he thought to corner him. "Now, doctor," he asked, "suppose the parson and the devil should have a lawsuit, which party do you think would win?" "The devil, unquestionably," replied the minister. "Ah!" chuckled the young lawyer. "And will you tell me why?" "Because he would have all the lawyers on his side."

An elderly lady entered a store and asked to be shown some table cloths. The salesman brought a pile and showed them to her, but she said she had seen those elsewhere—nothing suited her. "Haven't you something new?" she asked. The man then brought another pile and showed them to her. "These are the newest pattern," he said. "You will notice that the edge runs right around the border and the center is in the middle." "Dear me, yes. I will take half a dozen of those," said the lady. He surely was a diplomatic salesman.

Children sometimes have great expectations. A new settlement worker was going the rounds of her district one bright morning. In a crowded tenement some five or six little children gazed inquiringly at her as she entered. "Well, well, children," she said, "I never saw so many dirty faces in my life. Why don't you use some soap and water?" "We are waiting for de angel, mum," replied Tommy Tuff. "What angel?" asked the young woman. "Why de lady dat come fru here last week and gave one of de kids a nickel to wash his face."

Some people can do better with the plow. In his early days in the newspaper field a prominent southern editor was visited by a Georgia farmer, having his seventeen-year-old son in town, and who, upon entering the office said: "I come to get some information, Editor." "I shall be glad to afford you any I can," was the polite response. "Well," said the farmer, "this boy o' mine wants to go into the literary business, an' I thought you would know if there was any money in it. It's a good business, ain't it?" "Well, yes," said the editor, after some little hesitation; "I've been in it myself for some years, and—Whereupon the farmer eyed him from head to foot, glanced around the poorly-furnished office, surveyed the editor once more, and then, turning to his son said: "Coma 'long home Jim, and git back to yer plowin'."

W. C. T. U. MEET
Visitors from Petoskey Among Those Present at Meeting Last Friday.

The meeting of the W. C. T. U. held with Mrs. Frank Metcalf last week Friday was one of marked interest.

The meeting opened with singing the W. C. T. U. invocation, followed by those present reciting favorite texts of scripture, and repeating the Lord's prayer in concert. District president Mrs. P. J. Howard of Petoskey was expected to be present to conduct the devotionals, but for some reason failed to come.

Mrs. Correll sang a song of "Long Ago." Preliminary to singing, she related something of the one who wrote the song and with whom she was acquainted, as Mrs. Correll put it. It was a "Song with a story," and was quite pathetic.

After the reading of the minutes and business routine, it was moved that the union have a baked goods sale, and that it be held Saturday, August 21st. Details were left in the hands of the committee to arrange. The program followed: Reading by Mrs. Correll, trio by Esther Powell, Hildegard and Clara Wilkinson. This was very prettily sung, accompanied by Mrs. A. M. Wilkinson, who helped the girls in their practice.

The annual address of our able state president, Mrs. E. A. Calkins, which she delivered at the state convention held at Sault Ste. Marie in June last, was read by Mrs. P. D. Campbell and proved to be of much interest.

Mrs. Lewis read a report of the county convention, recently held in East Jordan, the meeting then closing with the W. C. T. U. benediction, followed by a picnic supper, which was heartily enjoyed by all present, among whom were several ladies from the Petoskey union. Such gatherings prove mutually pleasant and enjoyable.

PROGRESS OF COUNTY ROADS

Miles of Excellent Roads Being Built During Present Season.

Commissioner O. D. Hammond Has Already Completed Over Three Miles.

County Road Commissioner O. D. Hammond is certainly deserving of considerable praise for the excellent roads he is constructing this year and those built by him the past two years.

For the road built south of town on the Norwood road, a trunk line, completed last spring, a check was received last week by the County Treasurer amounting to $1,454, which practically covers the expense of building it. It is 16 feet wide, built of rock and beach gravel, and undoubtedly will stand the wear and tear of the heavy traffic which daily passes over it for many years.

Commissioner Hammond is now completing a stretch of nine foot gravel road running east and south from Green-ski Hill. Some two miles are completed and have been inspected by the state highway department.

The work done on Greenski Hill deserves special mention. From an almost impassable hill it has been cut down to an easy grade, covered with gravel, rolled until it is as hard as a rock, and is now one of the best graded hills and best made road beds one will find in the state.

Within the next week the camps will be moved from their present quarters, near the head of Susan lake, to what is known as the McNally Springs, three miles east of the present camp. The road camps gives all evidence of a busy place. Portable houses have been erected for the men, stables for the horses, a blacksmith shop, oil house, and with the road making machinery, it is almost a "burg" by itself.

Here a number of the men live with their families. Mr. Hammond has a telephone in his shanty and keeps in touch with the other commissioners and also with the men on the job.

For the stretch of road now being built the gravel will be obtained from what is known as the "gravel pit" on the old Whitman farm. The gravel here is pronounced to be extra good for road building purposes, and will be used for the two miles now under construction.

Before the season closes Commissioner Hammond expects to have a road built to within a few rods of the D'Ooge farm, completing in all five miles during the season.

He spread a formidable looking document wide open on the table, adjusted his place and prepared to read. "Dear old Nat!" said Alaric, looking at the paper. "You remember, mother, we met him at the station once when I was little more than a baby? Yet I can see him now as plainly as if I saw him yesterday—a portly, sandy haired old buck with three jolly chins."

"He was white toward the end and very, very thin," said Mr. Hawkes softly. "Was he?" from Alaric. "Fancy that! It just shows, mother, doesn't it?" He bent eagerly over the table as Hawkes traced some figures with a pencil on one of the pages of the will.

"How much did he leave?" And Alaric's voice rose to a pitch of well defined interest.

"His estate is valued, approximately, at some $200,000," replied the lawyer. Alaric gave a long, low whistle and smiled a broad, comprehensive smile.

Ethel for the first time showed a gleam of genuine interest.

Mrs. Chichester began to cry again. "Perhaps it was my fault I didn't see him often," she said.

Alaric, unable to curb his curiosity, burst out with, "How did the old boy split it up?"

"To his immediate relations he left—"

Mr. Hawkes looked up from the will and found three pairs of eyes fixed on him. He stopped. It may be that constant association with the law courts destroys faith in human nature; but, whatever the cause, it seemed to Mr. Hawkes that each of those eyes was reflecting the one dominant feeling—greed.

The expression in the family's combined eyes was astonishing in its directness. In its barefacedness, it struck the dignified gentleman suddenly dumb.

"Well? Well?" cried Alaric. "How much? Don't stop right in the middle of an important thing like that. You make me as nervous as a chicken."

Mr. Hawkes returned to the will and after looking at it a moment without reading said:

"To his immediate relations Mr. Kingsnorth left, I regret to say—nothing."

A momentary silence fell like a pall over the stricken Chichester family.

Mrs. Chichester rose, indignation flashing from the eyes that a moment since showed a healing hope.

"Nothing?" she cried incredulously. "Not a penny piece to any one?" ventured Alaric.

The faintest suspicion of a smile flitted across Ethel's face.

Hawkes looked keenly at them and answered:

"I deeply regret to say—nothing."

Mrs. Chichester turned to Ethel, who had begun to stroke her again.

"His own flesh and blood!" cried the poor girl.

"What a shabby old beggar!" commented Alaric indignantly.

"Mr. Hawkes was the most selfish the most—"

—began Mrs. Chichester, when Mr. Hawkes, who had been turning over the pages of the document before him, gave an ejaculation of relief.

"Ah! Here we have it. This, Mrs. Chichester, is how Mr. Kingsnorth expressed his attitude toward his relations in his last will and testament:

"I am the only member of the Kingsnorth family who ever made any money. All my precious relatives either inherited it or married to get it."

"I assure you"—began Mrs. Chichester.

Alaric checked her. "Half a moment, mother. Let us hear it out to the bitter end. It must have been an amazing old document."

Mr. Hawkes resumed: "Consequently I am not going to leave one penny to relations who are already well provided for."

Mrs. Chichester protested vehemently: "But we are not provided for."

"No," added Alaric. "Our bank's busted."

"We're ruined!" sobbed Mrs. Chichester.

"Broken!" said Alaric.

"We're nothing!" wailed the old lady. "Dear, dear!" said the lawyer. "How extremely painful!"

"That was why he spoke of her," said Hawkes gravely.

"And not a word of me?" asked Mrs. Chichester.

"We will come to that in a little later," and Mr. Hawkes again referred to the will. "It appears that this sister, Angela, married at the age of twenty a certain Irishman, by name O'Connell, and was cut off by her family."

"The man was an idiot—a perfect idiot," he hadn't a penny. It was a disaster."

Alaric checked his mother again.

Hawkes resumed: "Was cut off by her family, went to the United States of America with her husband, where a daughter was born. After going through many conditions of poverty with her husband, who never seemed to prosper, she died shortly after giving birth to the child."

He looked up. "Mr. Kingsnorth, elsewhere expressed his loving regret that in one of his sister's acute states of distress she wrote him asking him for the first time, I asked her: 'You have made your bed. Lie in it.'"

"She had disgraced the family. He was justified," broke in Mrs. Chichester.

"With death approaching," resumed Hawkes, "Mr. Kingsnorth's conscience began to trouble him, and the remembrance of his treatment of his unfortunate sister distressed him. If the child were alive he wanted to see her."

He made inquiries and found that the girl was living with her father in very poor circumstances in the city of New York. We sent sufficient funds for the journey, together with a request to the father to allow her to visit Mr. Kingsnorth in England. The father consented. However, before the young girl could sail Mr. Kingsnorth died."

"Oh!" cried Alaric, who had been listening intently. "Died, eh? That was too bad. Died before seeing her. Did you let her sail, Mr. Hawkes?"

"Yes. Mr. Kingsnorth left to her the sum of £1,000 a year be paid to any respect able, well connected woman of breeding and family who will undertake the education and upbringing of my niece, Margaret O'Connell, in accordance with the dignity and tradition of the Kingsnorths."

"He remembers a niece he never saw, and his own sister?" And Mrs. Chichester once more burst into tears.

"He treats cockfighting; that's all I can say," cried Alaric. "It simply beats cockfighting."

Mr. Hawkes went on reading: "If at the expiration of one year my niece is found to be, in the judgment of my executors, unworthy of further instruction she is to be returned to her father."

Alaric was moving restlessly about. "Does anything I've heard of positively anything?"

Ethel was looking intently at Peter's coat.

Hawkes continued: "On no account is her father to be permitted to visit her, and should the course of training be continued after the first year she must not on any account visit her father. After she reaches the age of twenty-one she can do as she pleases."

Mr. Hawkes folded up the will with the air of a man who had finished an important duty.

Alaric burst out with: "I don't see how that chance interests us as the house Mr. Hawkes?"

The lawyer removed his place and looking steadily at Mrs. Chichester, said:

"Now, my dear Mrs. Chichester, it was Mr. Kingsnorth's wish that the first lady to be approached on the matter of undertaking the training of the young lady should be you."

Mrs. Chichester rose to astonishment.

Alaric arose in anger. "My mother?" Ethel quietly pulled Peter's ear and smiled.

Mr. Hawkes went on quietly: "Mr. Kingsnorth said he would be up at least of his place having a strict upbringing in the best traditions of the Kingsnorths and that, though his sister Maria was somewhat narrow and conventional in ideas—I use his own words—still he felt sure she was eminently fitted to undertake such a charge. There you have the whole object of my visit. Now, will you undertake the training of the young lady?"

"I never heard of such a thing!" cried Mrs. Chichester furiously.

"Ethel!" said Alaric calmly.

"Tush and nonsense!" with which Alaric dismissed the whole matter.

"Then I may take it you refuse?" queried the astonished lawyer.

"Absolutely!" from Mrs. Chichester.

"Ethel!" from Alaric.

"I should say so!" and Alaric brought up the text.

Mr. Hawkes gathered up his papers and in a tone of regret ventured: "Then there is nothing more to be said. I was only carrying out the dead man's wishes by coming here and making the facts known to you. Mr. Kingsnorth was of the opinion that you were well provided for and that, outside of the sentimental reason that the girl was your own niece, the additional thousand pounds a year might be welcome as, say, pin money for your daughter."

Ethel laughed her dry, cheerless little laugh. "But, pin money?"

Alaric grew suddenly grave and drew his mother and sister out of Mr. Hawkes' vicinity.

"Listen, mother, Ethel. It's a cool thousand you know. Thousands don't grow on raspberry bushes when your bank's gone up. What do you think of it?"

Mrs. Chichester brightened.

"I would keep things together," she said.

"The wolf from the door," urged Alaric.

"No charity," chimed in Ethel.

In the Light of Firestone Extras

YOU who know, know tire values from experience; but note also the specifications in this cross section. The same relative values apply in all sizes of Firestone tires. For instance, in the 30 x 3 inch, you pay only 40 cents more for the more mileage values represented in these extras. And only a trifle more in proportion for the larger sizes.

Less material and lower grades are traps to make sales on prices.

The Firestone organization, the largest in the world specializing in tires, can make and market tires and tubes at a lower cost to you, the user, than any one else in the industry.

Homemade Lawn Sprinkler.

With a short length of old hose a serviceable lawn sprinkler can be quickly and easily made. One end is provided with a regular coupling for connecting it to the line of good hose. The other end is turned up for several inches and securely wired to the main part, thereby shutting off any flow through it. Several cuts are made into it about halfway across and six inches apart. If the water is forced in the only means of escape will be through the slots, which will produce fine sprays, giving as good service as a manufactured sprinkler.

J. B. Lancaster, 203 May St., Charlevoix, says, "I suffered for seven years from weak kidneys. My back ached at night and when I got up in the morning, I was stiff and lame. The kidney secretions passed too frequently and my rest was broken. I got Doan's Kidney Pills at the Ivy Drug Store and they did me a world of good. Obituary.

Henry Dixon, was born in Grey county, Canada, June 11th, 1851. Died at his home in Marion Township, Charlevoix county, Michigan, August 9th, 1915, aged 64 yrs., 1 mo., and 28 days. December 25th., 1870, he was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Hopps, who survives him. To this union 15 children were born; 4 are dead, 11 are living: Henry Dixon, Jr., Gunson Dixon, William Dixon, Charlevoix, Thomas Dixon, Boyne Falls, Mrs. Mary Balch, Mrs. Ethel Harrison, Charlevoix, Mrs. Eva Welch, Boyne City, Mrs. Lottie Williams, Saskatoon, Canada, Mrs. Eleanor Williams, Transcona, Canada, Mrs. Mrs. Mable Laraby, Los Angeles, California, Mrs. Lillie Oleson, Rago, Colorado, who are left to mourn their loss by his departure.

Beside the wife of his youth, who for nearly 45 years has shared with him the trials, cares, perplexing problems, prosperity and adversities of life, 35 of those years have been spent in Charlevoix county. Coming here when this country was covered with a forest, she shared with him the poverty and hardships incident to pioneer life. Eleven children, 34 grand children, 1 brother, 1 sister, a goodly number of more distant relatives and a host of friends are left to mourn their loss by his home going. The large family that he has reared and provided for, the comfortable home he has earned during the 35 years of his residence in Charlevoix county, testify of his ambition, energy and worth as a citizen.

The church is bereaved of a strong supporter, the community of an honest, honorable, upright, industrious and hard working citizen, the wife of a faithful husband, and the children of a faithful father.

About six months ago he was reclaimed after spending several years in a oaksidened condition. There were several prominent changes in his life that testified of the change wrought within his heart, prominently among them was his complete deliverance from the tobacco vice that had gripped him for years. His testimony was bright and clear, especially during the past six weeks, up to the day of his death. Though the summons came sudden, he was ready to answer the call.

He fell with his hand on the wheel of toil. The funeral was held on Friday, August 13th, in the Holiness church at Phelps, Rev. B. O. Shattuck conducting the services, assisted by Tony Clark. Contributed.

Missouri Changes Sailing Time.

This will accommodate many tourists who have expressed a desire to see the beautiful points in the bay, and also give those who have been spending the summer at these places a chance to board the boat at any point in the bay. This will make the arrival of the Missouri in Chicago Saturday morning.

GOOD SPEAKERS TO BE PRESENT

At Tenth Annual Republican Banquet to Be Held Friday Night.

Arrangements Completed for Big Fall Round-Up—Senator Townsend to Give Address.

From the point of speakers alone, the Tenth Annual Charlevoix County Republican banquet, to be held at Boyne City Friday night, will surpass any previous attempts at entertaining the members of the grand old party during the fall round-up," says the Boyne Citizen in a recent issue.

Four men from Washington will be present—two senators and two congressmen. These gentlemen have already sent their acceptances, as has State Senator J. Lee Morford. Letters of recent date have been received from each of the above acknowledging the invitation extended them to attend, and each have signified their intention of being present.

Preliminary to the banquet, United States Senator Charles E. Townsend will address the public in the city park at 7 o'clock. He will discuss many questions familiar to everyone and brings first-hand information from Washington. Regardless of political affiliations, this address should prove of interest and possibly a benefit, to every person who can arrange to hear it. Mr. Townsend is a fluent talker—an orator of marked ability.

The banquet will be served immediately following the open air meeting at the Wolverine Hotel. Three quartettes will be present and a five-piece orchestra. Arrangements have been made whereby the very best of service will be rendered at the hotel, and not a tiresome moment will be noted.

Besides the usual large attendance from East Jordan, Boyne Falls, Charlevoix and other points in the county, large delegations from Gaylord, Belaire, Atlanta and Petoskey have sent word they would be present.

Below is the program as arranged by the committee:

Musical.

Introduction of Toastmaster—Harry Curkendall, President of the Club.

Toastmaster—Hon. Wm. J. Pearson.

Affairs in Michigan—Hon. J. Lee Morford.

The Experience of a New Congressman in a New District—Hon. Frank D. Scott.

Wilkinson quartet.

The President's administration—Hon. G. J. Diekema.

Wilkinson quartet.

Tariff for Revenue Only—Hon. Chas. E. Townsend.

Twenty minutes of amusement—John M. Phillips, formerly with Field Minstrels, now with the Cherry Vale Theatrical Colony, East Jordan.

Foreign Affairs—Hon. Wm. Alden Smith, Senatorial Committee on Foreign Relations.

Charlevoix Republicans contemplating attending the banquet are very fortunate in having the matter of transportation taken care of. The Steamer City of Boyne will run an excursion to Boyne City on Friday evening, under the auspices of the Baptist Church. The boat will leave the Wilbur dock at 7:00 sharp. Fare for round trip 25 cents.

LADIES ENTERTAINED

At Home of Mrs. D. J. Tillotson in Honor of Mrs. M. V. Lemoux of Ridgeway.

Mrs. D. J. Tillotson entertained the following ladies to tea Tuesday afternoon: Mesdames Wood, Stafford and Yeamaas, of Charlevoix, Mrs. Waldeheiska of Terre Haute, Indiana, and Mrs. Jean Post of Thompsonville, in honor of Mrs. M. V. Lemoux of Ridgeway, Indiana.

The favors were pansies. The house was beautifully decorated with nasturtiums and pansies. The united ages of the ladies present was 428 years. All spent a very pleasant afternoon, relating past experiences of their lives. Each expressed a wish that they could be together with their hosts again in 1916, before leaving for their homes.

SIMON ALCOCK DIED THURSDAY

Had Been a Resident of Charlevoix Since 1895, Coming Here From Canada

Survived by Four Sons and Four Daughters—Also One Sister Aged 82 Years

Simon Alcock, deceased, better known as "Dad Alcock," departed this life August 19, 1915.

Mr. Alcock was born in England, county of Norfolk, village of Sherrington, on the 18th of April, 1830. In 1836, Mr. Alcock with the rest of the family migrated from England to Canada, settling on a bush farm north of Toronto.

After a few years his parents departed this life, leaving a family of eight, of whom all have passed away but one sister, Mrs. Barbara Summers, aged 82 years, who is hale and hearty.

He leaves a family of eight children, four sons and four daughters, Mrs. Agnes Flemmerfelt of White Rock, B. C., J. W. Alcock of Halls Prairie, B. C., Mrs. Chas. Carcy, Mrs. Alex Shearer, Mrs. Hattie Jefferies, Art Alcock, of Charlevoix, Mich.; Lafayette Alcock of Detroit, Mich., and Nordica Alcock, New Market, Ontario, Canada. There are thirty grandchildren and three great-grandchildren, besides a vast number of relatives in Canada, Ontario, the Canadian Northwest and Michigan, besides a host of friends and acquaintances.

As a father he was always kind, affectionate and true, as a friend, ever ready to give a helping hand in time of trouble. He always met his friends and acquaintances with a smile and a glad hand. Those who have known him longest know him best, as he was always upright in his dealings with mankind, good principles and morals, and was beloved by everyone who knew him. Those who knew him best will miss him most.

Mr. Alcock was a resident of Canada 59 years, and came to Charlevoix, Mich., in 1895, being a resident here until his death. Now he has gone to rest; our loss is his gain.

The funeral services were held Saturday afternoon, with interment at Brookside.

ADVICE TO HORSE OWNERS

Method of Treatment for Bursitis, or So-called Summer Sores

Farmers and Teamsters Have Same Trouble Each Year—Are Not Incurable.

Many horse owners at this season of the year find that their horses are troubled by sores which resist unusual methods of treatment, and which in this respect differ from ordinary wounds. These growths or sores are supposed to be of fungous origin. Their true nature and cause, however, have not been definitely determined. They are especially prevalent in the southern states, and are called summer sores on account of their persistency and the difficulty with which they are healed during the summer season. As cool weather approaches, healing frequently takes place, but there is always the possibility of the wound breaking out anew with the advent of warm weather. They may appear on any portion of the body, but are especially troublesome when occurring on the lower parts of the limbs or at points where the harness touches.

Frequently the first indication or appearance of the trouble is a small lump resembling a grain of shot beneath the skin. In a few days the skin sloughs off over the spot, leaving a raw surface. This increases in size until in a few weeks there is a raw surface from 1 to 2 inches in diameter. Commonly there is intense itching, and the animal bites and rubs the parts, aggravating the condition and increasing the size of the sore. The edges of these sores are usually rough in appearance and raised above the surface of the skin. When examined closely they appear like a mass of dark bruised tissue in which is embedded more or less of a yellow, gritty growth.

Numerous methods of treatment have been resorted to in this condition, with varying results, and frequently no improvement is noted until the approach of cold weather. Many cases, however, yield to the following treatment: The wound is thoroughly scraped with a surgeon's sterilized curette, or with a clean, disinfected dull knife, after which it is showered with cold water for 10 or 15 minutes. Iodoform is then dusted on and rubbed into the wound by means of a wad or absorbent cotton, and the wound is immediately recovered with a layer of colloidion. The iodoform and colloidion applications are repeated every 24 hours for 15 days or until the sores heal. Ether or chloroform may be used in place of iodoform, being poured on cotton and applied to the sore for two minutes before painting it with colloidion.

Formalin has been used by injecting it into the tissues. This, however, should be used only by a qualified veterinarian, as its improper use might cause severe sloughing and disastrous results. Not infrequently a valuable stallion becomes affected, in which case the genital organs may become involved and incapacitate the animal for breeding purposes. In such instances the injection of 75 to 100 grains of salvarsan, or neosalvarsan, into the blood circulation has proved almost a specific. This, however, should be carried out only by a competent veterinarian. It should also be considered that a single injection of this preparation costs from $15 to $20, and its use is therefore advisable only for the treatment of valuable animals.

OPEN DAY AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

Over 200 People Attended in Afternoon and Evening.

Summer People Came Out in Goodly Numbers—Fine Program Rendered.

Tuesday, August 24, Open Day at the library, proved an interesting and enjoyable event. About 200 people visited the library in response to the generous invitation of the librarian.

Upon entering the building one was at once greeted by the beautiful floral decorations, which were artistically arranged with the interior furnishings. Even the fragrance of the flowers seemed to extend a cordial welcome to each visitor. Miss Anna Bon, librarian, should be commended on the manner in which she arranged the spacious room and cared for the people who were present.

At 3:00 o'clock a fine program which had been previously arranged, was rendered for the entertainment of all present and proved a winner. Mrs. Charles Creighton gave a pianologue, Mrs. Grace Lee favored the assemblage with a reading. Mrs. Gilligan rendered a piano solo and a reading. Miss Neta Mayne gave one of her delightful readings, making the afternoon program one of the best given in Charlevoix in some time.

Refreshments were also served, consisting of punch and wafers. Several young ladies presided at the punch bowl. This feature was also a favorite attraction. Miss Marion Parsons had charge of the visitors enrollment list.

The reception committee who greeted all who visited the library were Mrs. Harry Nichols, Mrs. J. L. Crane, Mrs. A. F. Bridge, Mrs. W. E. Hampton, and Mrs. H. S. Harsha.

The nasturtiums, white clematis, and other beautiful flowers which were used to decorate the building were generously donated by the residents of the city. The business men willingly donated flower baskets, vases, jars, etc., to help set the floral decorations off in their highest splendor.

Taken as a whole Open Day this year proved the best yet, and hopes are set forth for a bigger attendance next year, with just as good a program as that of Tuesday afternoon.

Cause is Discovered.

Michigan's mysterious cattle disease, apparently upon the east side of the state, seems to have broken out anew on the west side. Oceana county is the latest territory affected. W. R. Harper, a member of the state live stock sanitary commission, telegraphed for State Veterinarian Dumphrey to go to Hart at once. Mr. Harper reported that calves and lambs on four farms near Hart were dying of a disease unknown to him. It was later discovered that the loss of stock was caused by eating what is called "water hemlock."

ANNOUNCEMENT PARTY

Friends of Miss Mary Kirchner Entertained by Mesdames Cooper, Cline and Barney

Mrs. H. C. Cooper, assisted by Mrs. W. A. Cline and Mrs. W. R. Barney, entertained a few of the most intimate friends of Miss Mary Kirchner at the home of the former, 105 Dixon avenue, last Thursday afternoon.

A new and most interesting game of "Hearts" was played on the lawn, the honors falling to Miss Hallie Bon. Later the guests were invited to the dining room, which had been tastefully decorated for the occasion in pink and white. From the chandelier to the corners of the table extended a canopy of pink and white ribbon. In the center of the table was a bouquet of pink and white asters, and extending from this were narrow pink and white ribbons. Attached to the end of these were the favors, pink and white sweet peas, so arranged to form a large wreath around the outside of the table. As each guest received her favor, she drew from its hiding place in the center-piece, a small envelope containing the announcement of the approaching marriage of Miss Mary Alice Kirchner of Saginaw, and Clinton Gurley Cooper of this city, the wedding to take place in October. Each guest left extending their congratulations and best wishes for the future of the happy young couple.

50TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Wakeman Entertain at Boyne Falls.

Last Friday evening occurred one of the most enjoyable events in the history of Boyne Falls, when Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Wakeman celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary at the home of their son, Leslie Wakeman.

A particular feature of the event was the wedding ceremony being performed again. At this service the same couple, Mr. and Mrs. Ollen, who stood up with the old couple at their wedding 50 years ago were present. At the time of their marriage a double wedding occurred. Jim Battomely, whose wife has long past died, was a participant in the ceremony, and was a guest at the anniversary celebration. Rev. Will Shepard of Boyne Falls performed the ceremony over again.

The occasion was not only a family gathering, but friends who had not seen each other for years were each surprised to see the other there. Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mears, who celebrated their 50th anniversary were among the 54 guests present. Mr. and Mrs. Eula Wakeman of this city attended the celebration, the former being a son of the old couple. A special program and music were favorite attractions, and the refreshments proved a climax to the evening's jolly festivities.

"Hello Girl" is Budding Poet's Praise Theme

If Central Should Tell All She Knew—Good Night! General Trend of Thought.

The "Hello Girl" and how much she keeps to herself that would cause trouble if repeated is made theme of budding poet (or poetess) who sent the product of his or her genius to The Courier, presumably for publication.

Not being in the habit of publishing anonymous communications there was some hesitancy in The Courier office, but finally it was decided that no one would suffer greatly through publication and possibly some budding poet might meet encouragement by seeing the product of his or her pen in print. Hence the following:

If the telephone girl would tell all she knows, She would turn half our friends into bitterest foes, So be good to the telephone girl. The telephone girl sits still in her chair, And listens to voices from everywhere; She hears all the gossip, she hears all the news; She knows who is happy, and who has the blues; She knows all our sorrows; she knows all our joys;

SATURDAY IS PICNIC DAY

Maple Grove to Entertain Grangers of County and Their Friends.

Hon. H. F. Baker of Wadock Speaker of the Day—Base Ball Game and Fun Galore.

Grangers and their friends are looking forward to the good time they will have on Saturday next, at the annual picnic of the Maple Grove Grange. The day will be generally observed throughout the township and many people from Charlevoix, Boyne City, Petoskey and other points will spend a greater portion of the day on the picnic grounds.

The day's program will be of unusual interest, and the committee in charge are to be congratulated in the effort they have made. There will be something doing all the day long. Hon. H. F. Baker of Wadock, ex-speaker of the house of representatives and well known throughout Michigan, has been secured as the leading attraction. He is a fluent, convincing speaker, and being a Granger himself, will be able to tell his audience many things of great interest.

The ball game in the afternoon between Horton Bay and Bay Shore gives all promise of being a warm one, as there is considerable rivalry between the two teams. Other sports will also take place in the afternoon, which will be of interest to both old and young. Liberal prizes will be awarded to the winners of all events.

During the afternoon a special program will be rendered, consisting of recitations, songs, musical selections, etc. Visiting grangers will be called on for short talks, and everything possible done to entertain the crowd.

A feature of the day which will interest most of the men folks will be the "eats," served by the ladies of the grange. Grange dinners have the reputation of being the best there is, and past experience has shown that the ladies of Maple Grove Grange can serve a dinner that is hard to equal. Luncheon and supper will also be served, to be followed by a dance in the evening.

The attendance at Maple Grove Grange picnic has increased each year, and it is expected that this year's attendance will be as large, if not larger than in previous years. Take a day off and have a good time.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the First Baptist church will be held Wednesday evening, Sept. 1, at 8 p. m. All officers of the church will have written reports which will be read in open meeting. Every member of the church is earnestly requested to be in attendance at this meeting, which closes the business for this year, and formulates plans for the coming year.

Very respectfully,

Lloyd C. Vinyard, Pastor.

Build Up Business by Advertising Goods

Meet the Mail Order Houses With the Same Method They Have Adopted and Use.

Business building is a science, which fact must be recognized and understood by the business man before he can make a decided success of the line in which he is engaged. The object of business is to sell goods but in order to sell them it is necessary to let the public know that you have the goods to sell and also to quote the price. The articles sold must be up to specification and give satisfaction to the buyer. Taking it for granted that before goods can be sold the public must know where they can be bought, it becomes necessary from the outset to advertise such goods in established periodicals and to keep up this advertising, both in season and out. Advertising is silent salesmanship, and like the individual salesman must be truthful and accurate in statement and presentation. By advertising a certain line and representing it exactly as it is gains the confidence of the public, and confidence is after all the real foundation of all business. Confidence can be created and capitalized by the merchant and the wise merchant well knows this fact. No individual ever gained a reputation or success by keeping his ability in the background; neither did any merchant ever make a success by refusing to advertise the stock which he carried. When you have anything for sale, in order to sell it you have to let the people know that you are in the field for business and by adhering to straight and convincing advertising you can get the business that you desire. Business is built up through the medium of printers ink, which fact is substantiated by the experience of the great business houses of the country. Mail order houses have built up their trade through advertising and everybody knows this fact. It is constantly hammering away at the public that the mail order men get their trade and they never hesitate to take advantage of any opportunity to increase their advertising space when they see a chance to get more business in that direction. The great business builder is advertising and is absolutely essential for mercantile success.

GET READY FOR WINTER

Fire Chief Marshall Asks Citizens to See That Chimneys Are Cleaned Before Cold Weather.

Fire Chief Marshall tells us that now is the time to get busy cleaning up your alleys, basements, garrets and chimneys in order to protect ourselves from fire. Furnaces should be looked over and thoroughly overhauled preparatory to their use during the coming fall and winter. If the chimney need cleaning and repairing, do it now—later on may be too late. Clean the chimneys—a burning chimney has been the cause of many a disastrous fire. Within the next week or so every business place and residence in the city will be inspected, and proper protection, if not made voluntary, will be enforced.

HEED THE WARNING

Many Charlevoix People Have Done So.

When the kidneys are weak they give unmistakable warnings that should not be ignored. By examining the urine and treating the kidneys upon the first sign of disorder, many days of suffering may be saved. Weak kidneys usually expel a dark, ill-smelling urine, full of "brickdust" sediment and painful in passage. Sluggish kidneys often cause a dull pain in the small of the back, headaches, dizzy spells, tired, languid feelings and frequent rheumatic twinges.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys only. There is no better recommended remedy.

Charlevoix people endorse Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. R. M. McKee, 214 Mason St., Charlevoix, says: "I had been troubled for several months by kidney disease. My body bloated quite badly and I had weak back and severe pains in my kidneys. My rest was broken at night. I finally got Doan's Kidney Pills at the Ivy Drug Store and they gave me relief in every way."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. McKee had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N.Y.

HIS SUMMER OUTING

How He Saved a Girl From Drowning.

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

On Lake Winnepogo in New England is a camp where in summer several hundred girls of all ages from twelve to twenty are congregated. They are housed in bungalows and eat on a long, broad portico, an extension of the central building, and dance in a hall built expressly for that purpose and for sundry exhibitions. There are riding masters and swimming masters—both of course involves horses and paraphernalia for both—and canoes and lathum. A number of tennis courts complete the equipment for summer exercises.

Camp Wocomoc is located on one end of the lake, which is several miles long and from a half to a mile wide. A newcomer is not allowed to go on in a canoe until she can swim continuously a certain distance and keep afloat for fifteen minutes. Having passed this test, she may thereafter go canoeing at her pleasure. She is not hampered with skirts, for every girl must wear the camp uniform—a blouse, bloomer knickerbockers and stockings to the knees. This dress is also worn by the ladies in charge, and when they are short and desby it gives them an appearance of a waddling fat hen. As to the young ladies in camp costume, they all look about the same age—that is, anywhere between twelve and fifteen.

Nicholas Brewerton, a young lawyer of promise, having worked very hard during the winter till late into the spring, frequented friends in New England for a place to spend a few weeks where he could be quiet. There must be no hotels, no casinos, nobody, in fact, except himself. The best that could be done for him was Lake Winnepogo. The person who recommended it—Miss Webster—forgot to say anything about the girls' camp. It may be that she left it out of her description of the location intentionally, thinking that the sight of young girls paddling about in picturesque costumes would be a pleasant sight for the young man. She may have had a sinister intention. Be this as it may, the young man was recommended to go to Lake Winnepogo, but to the other end from the girls' camp.

Brewerton went to Lake Winnepogo and found at the end where he had been advised to settle several cottages, one of which was to rent. After learning that the occupants of the others were couples with small children who desired quietude he took the nearest cottage, getting his meals at a farm house near by. There was a rowboat in an outhouse which was suited to the house. Being settled, Brewerton prepared to live an uneventful life and rest.

But "man proposes, God disposes." One morning—the next after his arrival—Brewerton got out his rowboat and started out to row lazily on the lake. It was a beautiful summer morning, and the hills on one side were reflected in the water. Light clouds floated above as indolently as Brewerton floated on the lake. He was much pleased that this was the only boat within sight. Truly this was just what he had come for. He thanked in his heart the lady who had recommended it.

Mark! Brewerton had pulled up near the shore where there were overhanging trees. From under the branches came an exclamation of dissatisfaction. The voice was feminine and seemed to be that of a child. From a disturbance of the branches he inferred that some one in a boat had become entangled in them. A few strokes brought him to where he could see what was going on.

First, there was a canoe with the word "Wocomoc" painted on the bow; second, there was a girl in the boat, who might have been twelve, thirteen and perhaps fourteen, dressed in a costume Brewerton had never seen before. The navy blue material of her apparel from her waist to her knees might have been a skirt or something else, he could not tell what. Judging from its length, she should be about six years old, but Brewerton was sure she was not as young as that.

"Can I do anything for you, little girl?" he asked.

"I'm not quite as familiar with canoeing as I should be. I came under the shade of these branches, and in getting out I am afraid I shall upset the canoe."

Brewerton reached forth his hand, took hold of an end of the unsteady shell and withdrew it from under the branches.

"Can you manage it now?" he asked. The girl put her paddle in the water, and the canoe careened on one side. She gave a little shriek.

"Your mother should not have let you come out in such a tottly boat without your being accustomed to such sport. Look out! You'll go over."

"Oh, dear, I'm afraid I'll be drowned!" Brewerton was perplexed. He did not like to leave the child in her perilous position and did not know what to do with her. Finally he told her that if she would get into his boat he would take her home with her canoe in tow. She gladly accepted the invitation, taking a seat in the stern facing him and holding a line attached to her canoe.

"Where do you live?" asked Brewerton.

"I live in a cottage on the north side of the lake. But half the distance out to a house in another direction Brewerton looked at her in surprise and she said she had "got turned around." But she soon confessed her self mistaken again and said she thought she would go to the camp.

"What camp?"

"Camp Wocomoc."

Then for the first time Brewerton learned that around a bend in the lake there was a girls' camp.

"For kids?" he asked.

"Most of us are kids, but there are some older girls."

For a kid she was quite entertaining. Brewerton was amused to hear her at times talk like a grown person. She had a sweet smile, a pair of dimples in her cheeks and pretty eyes. Brewerton was inclined to think that when she became a woman she would be quite an attractive one.

Presently they turned the bend, and the carman, turning, caught sight of the camp. He was much astonished. There on the margin of the lake was a congregation of boats about a large float for swimming purposes, equipped with diving apparatus. Brewerton pulled up to a landing where stood a number of girls, all in camp costume. His passenger got out of his boat, thanked him and, having tethered her canoe, went up to the camp.

Brewerton pulled back to his cottage, not knowing whether to be dissatisfied or not with his discovery. He rather thought that he would like to have the little girl go boating with him occasionally. Her prattle rested him. Indeed, during the next few days he found himself wishing he would meet her again on the lake. If he should be would inquire her name and address and ask her mother if she would not let her little girl go out with him.

One afternoon Brewerton got into his boat for a pull to explore the lake from end to end. He pulled up past Camp Wocomoc till he could go no farther by water, then turned and pulled back. Noticing that the swimming float was covered with girls, while others were splashing in the water, he concluded to go to it and watch the aquatic performances. At a point about a hundred feet from the float he paused. Some of the girls were diving from a springboard. One girl climbed a ladder and stood on a platform about twenty feet above the lake. Presently she gave a jump and plunged head-first. The water closed over her and she did not appear again for half a minute, and when she did she popped up within a few yards of Brewerton's boat and facing him.

Great heavens! She was the kid he had rescued from under the branches of a tree and had taken into his boat to save from drowning!

The water was cool, but not cool enough to keep the blood from rushing in a torrent to her cheeks. Though out of breath, she ducked and came up with her face the other way and swimming lustily for the boat.

Brewerton's eyes were opened to the fact that he had been fooled. Indeed, he had been fooled in more than one respect. He had by this time seen a number of the girls of the camp and had learned that he could not judge of their age when in camp costume. But why should this girl have deceived him, refusing to be afraid of the water? Quite likely she was one of the most expert swimmers on the lake. Doubtless she was one of the dearest of the camp. All this was unimportant to Brewerton, and being quite intelligible, it occupied his mind during the rest of his sojourn at Lake Winnepogo.

One day in September, after the fall began back to the city, Brewerton received a message from his friend Mrs. Webster, asking if it would be convenient for him to dine with her the next evening. She was anxious to hear how he liked Lake Winnepogo. He replied that it would be convenient, and he was desirous of learning why she had not told him that there was a girls' camp on the lake.

Brewerton had been admitted to his hostess' house and was telling her about how he liked the lake when the doorbell rang and another guest was admitted. Mrs. Webster left him to reveal the newcomer and presently returned with a stately young woman in dinner dress. Brewerton's eyes were fixed on her for a few moments before he recognized in her altered costume the girl he had saved from drowning.

There was on the young lady's face an expression of mingling emotions. There was some blushing, some shrinking, some sign of a guilty conscience, the whole topped with a dash of amusement. On Mrs. Webster's face it was all amusement. On Brewerton's face—Brewerton's face was indescribable.

"This is my friend Nick Brewerton," said the hostess, "and this is also my friend Miss Eleanor Tibbits. I believe you two have met before. Be seated."

It was not till long after this, when Brewerton had become the husband of Miss Tibbits, that he learned what a nefarious conspiracy had been concocted against him. Miss Tibbits had been with Mrs. Webster when he asked to be recommended to a restful summer spot where there were no women. Miss Tibbits—she was twenty years of age—thought it would be a good scheme to impose herself on the gentleman in camp costume as a little girl. She had engaged to go to Camp Wocomoc and when Brewerton arrived was posted as to the fact. She had "laid" for him and caught him the first day after his arrival. Her husband, referring to her popping up before him after having taken a twenty foot dive, declared that it was more surprising than if he had seen a veritable mermaid with a fish's tail.

WELL ATTENDED

Annual Camp Meeting of Church of God Great Success.

The annual camp meeting of the Church of God, held on the camp ground south of Charlevoix, Aug. 6 to 15, was a success from start to finish. There was a much larger attendance this year than usual, and it is said to be the best meeting ever held on these grounds.

Various parts of Michigan were represented at the meeting. At various times throughout the meeting the altar was filled with seekers, some for justification, some for sanctification, some for healing, and especially the last night when those present listened to a stirring appeal to sinners by James Turner and quite a number came to the altar.

The last Sunday was well represented by the surrounding communities which is very much appreciated. A special effort was made to entertain all, and it is believed all received good by attending. Brother James Turner gave two very interesting talks on missionary day. A force of about a dozen ministers were present throughout the meeting. A ten day outing could not be better spent than to come to these meetings every year.

It has been decided that the meetings will begin the first Friday in August every year till further notice is given. An increased attendance is looked for next year and all are invited to come and enjoy the meetings.

We thank all for any assistance given in the meeting and solicit your cooperation for the future. A tent meeting beginning at Burgess, Sunday, August 22, to continue indefinitely as the Lord may direct, we solicit the attendance of the people of that community. A.G. Pontius.

PEG O'MY HEART

By J. Hartley Manners

A Comedy of Youth Founded by Mr. Manners on His Great Play of the Same Title—Illustrations From Photographs of the Play

Copyright, 1913, by Dodd, Mead & Company

SYNOPSIS.

Frank O'Connell, young Irish patriot, is shot and wounded by British soldiers while making a home rule speech. He is aided by Angela Kingsnorth, an English society girl, who defends him.

Angela takes O'Connell to her brother's home and helps to nurse him. He recovers, and he and the girl become fast friends.

O'Connell when well is sent to jail for disturbing the peace. He finally writes Angela that he has finished his sentence.

O'Connell and Angela wed. One day she espoused the Irish cause. Her brother, a member of parliament, is very angry.

The happy couple come to America to live. A daughter is born to them. Angela's brother refuses to help the couple in any way. Angela dies.

O'Connell names his daughter Margaret and calls her "Peg." O'Connell receives a most important letter from England, which perplexes him.

O'Connell allows Peg to visit England at her uncle's request. The elder Kingsnorth's heart had finally softened toward his dead sister's little girl.

Peg goes to the home of the Chichester family in England at the direction of Mr. Hawkes, Kingsnorth's attorney, as Kingsnorth suddenly dies.

She first meets Ethel Chichester and Brent, a married man in love with Ethel. She interrupts them by accident in a secret meeting.

Ethel is enraged at Peg and haughtily dismisses her from the drawing room, sending her to the servants' quarters. The Chichesters have lost their money in a bank failure.

Hawkes arrives and reads the Kingsnorth will. It leaves most of the fortune to Peg and offers liberal pay to any one who will undertake her education and social training.

Mrs. Chichester finally agrees to bring up Peg in return for the money promised, although she openly despises the shabby young girl.

CHAPTER XVI.

"I'd be happier with me fether,"

"SOMETHING may be saved from the wreck," reasoned Mrs. Chichester more hopefully.

"Until I get really started," said Alarie with a sense of climax.

Mrs. Chichester turned to her daughter. "Ethel?"

"Whatever you decide, mamma."

Mrs. Chichester thought in a moment, then decided. "I'll do it," she said determinedly. "It will be hard, but I'll do it." She went slowly and deliberately to Mr. Hawkes, who by this time had disposed of all his documents and was preparing to go. A look in Mrs. Chichester's face stopped him. He smiled at her.

"Well?" he asked.

"For the sake of the memory of my dead sister, I will do as Nathaniel wished," said Mrs. Chichester, with great dignity and self-abnegation.

Mr. Hawkes breathed a sigh of relief.

"Good!" he said. "I'm delighted. It is splendid. Now that you have decided so happily there is one thing more I must tell you. The young lady is not to be told the conditions of the will unless at the discretion of the executors should some crisis arise. She will be to all intents and purposes your guest. In that way we may be able to arrive at a more exact knowledge of her character. Is that understood?"

The family signified severally and collectively that it was.

"And now," beamed the lawyer, happy at the fortunate outcome of a situation that a few moments before seemed so straitened, "where is your bell?"

Alarie indicated the bell.

"May I ring?" asked the lawyer.

"Certainly," replied Alarie.

Mr. Hawkes rang.

Alarie watched him curiously. "Want a sandwich or something?"

Hawkes smiled benignly on the unfortunate family and rubbed his hands together self-satisfiedly.

"Now I would like to send for the young lady—the heiress."

"Where is she?" asked Mrs. Chichester.

"She arrived from New York this morning, and I brought her straight here. I had to call on a client, so I gave her your address and told her to come here and wait."

At the word "wait" an uneasy feeling took possession of Ethel. That was the word used by that wretched little creature who had so rudely intruded upon her and Brent. Could it be possible—

The footman entered at that moment.

The lawyer questioned him.

"Is there a young lady waiting for Mr. Hawkes?"

"A young lady, sir? No, sir," answered Jarvis.

Mr. Hawkes was puzzled. What in the world had become of her? He told the cabman distinctly where to go. Jarvis opened the door to go out when a thought suddenly occurred to him. He turned back and spoke to the lawyer:

"There's a young person sitting in the kitchen—came up and knocked at the door and said she had to wait until a gentleman called. Can't get nothing out of her."

Hawkes brightened up.

"That must be Miss O'Connell," he said. He turned to Mrs. Chichester and asked her if he might bring the young lady in there.

"My niece in the kitchen?" said Mrs. Chichester to the unfortunate footman. "Surely you should know the difference between my niece and a servant!"

"I am truly sorry, madam," replied Jarvis in distress, "but there was nothing to tell."

"Another such mistake and you can leave my employment," Mrs. Chichester added severely.

Jarvis pleaded piteously:

"Upon my word, madam, no one could tell."

"That will do!" thundered Mrs. Chichester. "Bring my niece here—at once!"

The wretched Jarvis departed on his errand, mattering to himself: "Wait until they see her. Who in the world could tell she was their relation?"

Mrs. Chichester was very angry. "It's monstrous," she exclaimed.

"Stoopid!" agreed Alarie. "Doocid stoopid."

Ethel said nothing. The one thought that was passing through her mind was, "How much did that girl hear Brent say, and how much did she see Mr. Brent do?"

Hawkes tried to smooth the misunderstanding out.

"I am afraid it was all my fault," he explained. "I told her not to talk—just to say that she was to wait. I wanted to have an opportunity to explain matters before introducing her."

"She should have been brought straight to me," complained Mrs. Chichester. "The poor thing!" Then with a feeling of outraged pride she said: "My niece in the kitchen—a Kingsnorth mistaken for a servant!"

The door opened and Jarvis came into the room. There was a look of half triumph on his face as he said:

"The young lady is here."

Mrs. Chichester was angry; Ethel said nothing.

to say: "Now, who would not make a mistake like that? Who could tell this girl was your niece?"

He beckoned Peg to come into the room.

Then the Chichester family received the second shock they had experienced that day—one computed with which the failure of the bank paled into insignificance. When they saw the strange, shabby, red-haired girl slouch into the room with her parcels and that disgraceful-looking dog, they felt the hand of misfortune had indeed fallen upon them.

As Peg wandered into the room Mrs. Chichester and Alarie looked at her in horrified amazement.

Ethel took one swift glance at her and then turned her attention to Peg.

Jarvis looked reproachfully at Mrs. Chichester as much as to say: "What did I tell you?" and went out.

Alarie whispered to his mother:

"Oh, I say, really, you know—it isn't true! It can't be."

Peg suddenly saw Michael and began to bark furiously at him. Michael responded vigorously until Peg quieted him.

At this juncture Mr. Hawkes came forward and, taking Peg gently by the arm, reassured her by saying:

"Come here, my dear. Come here. Don't be frightened. We're all your friends."

He brought Peg over to Mrs. Chichester, who was staring at her with tears of mortification in her eyes. When Peg's eyes met her aunt's she bobbed a little courtesy she used to do as a child whenever she met some of the gentlefolk.

Mrs. Chichester went cold when she saw the gauche act. Was it possible that this creature was her sister Angela's child? It seemed incredible.

"What is your name?" she asked sternly.

"Peg, ma'am."

"What?"

"Sure, ma name's Peg, ma'am," and she bobbed another little courtesy.

Mrs. Chichester closed her eyes and shivered. She asked Alarie to ring for her.

Peg heard him, looked at him and laughed. He certainly was odd. Then she looked at Ethel, then at Mr. Hawkes, then all around the room, as if she missed some one. Finally she faced Mrs. Chichester again.

"Are you me Uncle Nat's widdy?"

"No, I am not," contradicted the old lady sharply.

"Then how are you me—amnt?" demanded Peg.

"I am your mother's sister," replied Mrs. Chichester.

"Oh!" cried Peg. "Then your name's Monica?"

"It is."

"What do ye think of that?" said Peg under her breath. She surreptitiously opened out the miniature and looked at it; then she scrutinized her aunt. She shook her head.

"Ye don't look a bit like me poor mother did."

"What have you there?" asked Mrs. Chichester.

"Me poor mother's picture," replied Peg softly.

"Let me see it," and Mrs. Chichester held out her hand for it. Peg showed it to Mrs. Chichester, all the while keeping a jealous hold on the corner of the frame. No one would ever take it away from her. The old lady looked at it intently. Finally she said:

"She had changed very much since I last saw her—and in one year."

"Sorrowful poverty did that, Aunt

As that young gentleman passed Ethel on his way to the bell he said: "It can't really be true! Ethel, Ethel?"

"Quaint," was all his sister replied.

Hawkes quickly drew Peg's attention to her aunt by introducing her:

"This lady is Mrs. Chichester—your aunt." Peg looked at her doubtfully a moment, then turned to Hawkes and asked him:

"Where's me uncle?"

"Alas, my dear child, your uncle is dead!"

"Dead!" exclaimed Peg in surprise.

"After sending for me?"

"He died just before you sailed," added Hawkes.

"God rest his soul," said Peg piously.

"Sure, if I'd known that I'd never have come at all, I'm too late, then. Good day to ye," and she started for the door.

Mr. Hawkes stopped her.

"Where are you going?"

"Back to me father."

"Oh, nonsense!"

"But I must go back to me father if me uncle's dead."

"It was Mr. Kingsnorth's last wish that you should stay here under your aunt's care. So she has kindly consented to give you a home."

Peg gazed at Mrs. Chichester earnestly.

"Have ye?" she asked.

Mrs. Chichester, with despair in every tone, replied, "I have!"

"Thank ye," said Peg, bobbing an other little courtesy.

Mrs. Chichester gazed at Peg and covered her eyes with her hand as if to shut out some painful sight.

Peg looked at Mrs. Chichester and at the significant action. There was no mistaking its significance. It conveyed dislike and contempt so plainly that Peg felt it through her whole nature.

She turned to Alarie and found him regarding her as though she were some strange animal. Ethel did not deign to notice her. She whispered to Hawkes:

"I can't stay here."

"Why not?" asked the lawyer.

"I'd be happier with me fether," said Peg.

"You'll be quite happy here—quite."

"We're not wanted here, Michael!" she murmured.

The terrier looked up at her and then buried his head under her arm as though ashamed.

Jarvis came in response to the ring at that moment, bearing a pained, martyr-like expression on his face.

Mrs. Chichester directed him to take away Peg's parcels and the dog.

Peg frightenedly clutched the terrier.

"Oh, no, ma'am," she pleaded. "Plaze take Michael with me. Don't take him away from me."

"Take it away," commanded Mrs. Chichester severely, "and never let it inside the house again."

"Well, if ye don't want him inside yer house ye don't want me inside yer house," Peg snipped back.

Hawkes pleaded:

"Not," said Peg firmly. "I will not give him up."

The lawyer tried again to take the dog from her. "Come, Miss O'Connell; you really must be reasonable."

"I don't care about being reasonable," replied Peg. "Michael was given to me by me father, an' he's not very big, an' he's not a watchdog; he's a pet dog—an' look!"

She caught sight of Ethel's little poodle, and with a cry of self-justification, she said:

"See, she has a dog in the house—right here in the house. Look at it!" And she pointed to where the little ball of white wool lay sleeping on Ethel's lap. Then Peg laughed heartily. "I didn't know what it was until it moved."

CHAPTER XVII.

Peg and the Chichester Family.

PEG finally weakened under Mr. Hawkes' powers of persuasion.

Putting Michael on the head, she said to the footman:

"Ye won't hurt him, will ye?"

Michael at that stage flicked her hand and whined, as though he knew they were to be separated. Peg comforted him and went on: "Au! I'd be much obliged to ye if ye'd give him some wather an' a bone. He loves mutton bones."

Peg looked down and found Alarie sitting at a desk near the door staring at her in disgust.

He was such a funny looking little fellow to Peg that she could not feel any resentment toward him. His sleek, well brushed hair, his carefully creased and admirably cut clothes, his self-sufficiency and, above all, his absolute assurance that whatever he did was right amused Peg immensely. He was an utterly new type of young man to her, and she was interested. She smiled at him now in a friendly way and said: "Ye must know Michael is simply crazy about tautan. He loves mutton."

Alarie turned indignantly away from her.

"Come here!" called Mrs. Chichester. Peg walked over to her, and when she got almost beside the old lady she turned to have another glimpse at Alarie and gave him a little, chuckling, good natured laugh.

"Look at me!" commanded Mrs. Chichester sternly.

"Yes, ma'am," replied Peg, with a little courtesy. Mrs. Chichester closed her eyes for a moment. What was to be done with this barbarian? Why should this affection be thrust upon her? Then she thought of the thousand pounds a year. She opened her eyes and looked severely at Peg.

"Don't call me 'ma'am,'" she said.

"No, ma'am," replied Peg nervously, then instantly corrected herself. "No, an't! No, an't!"

"An't!" said Mrs. Chichester haughtily. "An't, not an't."

Alarie commented to Ethel:

"An't! Like some little crawly insect."

Peg heard him, looked at him and

OXALIC acid is used in tanning, calico printing, woolen and silk dyeing, and in various bleaching processes, especially the bleaching of straw for hats and bonnets. The laundries also use nearly 3,000,000 pounds a year in whitening shirts and collars. From eight to ten million pounds are annually consumed in this country, and prior to 1903 it all came from Germany, England, Norway, Belgium, and Austria, which countries had combined to form a syndicate to control the price all over the world. Prices to the United States at that time ranged from 8 to 11 cents a pound. The syndicate was controlled by Germany, from which came three fourths of the acid.

In 1903 the manufacture of oxalic acid was undertaken on a small scale, experimentally, in this country, the plant being located in Pennsylvania. No sooner did the construction of this plant come to the attention of the syndicate than prices dropped, in 1903 to 4.7c; 1904, 4.6c; 1905, 4.7c; 1906, 5.2c. This sort of price-cutting knocked the American company out of the ring, and immediately the oxalic syndicate raised the price to 7c, and in 1907 to 9c. In 1908 the American company made another start, and the syndicate dropped the price to 6c.

The Republican revision of the tariff was up about that time, and the American company presented figures which induced Congress to give a protective duty of 2c a pound on oxalic acid. This duty was based solely on the difference in cost of common labor at home and abroad, per pound of product, and did not take into account the overhead charges and selling costs. When this duty went into effect the foreign price went to 7c, where it remained through 1910, 1911, and 1912. By some pretty close figuring the American company was able to operate at a profit, and it acted as a check on the foreign syndicate methods of price controlling. A large share of the annual consumption was being manufactured in the United States, the only money going abroad was for the purchase of potash, the raw material; American labor was being employed at wages which enabled the men to be good customers of the clothier and the food producer, and the country was the possessor of a new industry, which would, if properly fostered, rendered us wholly independent of Germany.

Then came the destructive tariff legislation of the Democratic party, which sneaked into the capitol through a crack in the protective party wall. The duty on oxalic acid was cut 25 per cent. This was too low for protection, but it gave the foreign syndicate the opportunity it sought to dump oxalic acid on this market, and they lost no time in taking advantage of it. The first quarter of the fiscal year 1914, under Republican law, 1,500,000 pounds were imported; the second quarter, when the Underwood law took effect, 1,720,250 came in; the third quarter, 2,600,000; the fourth quarter, 2,850,000 pounds. Then came the war, acting as a high tariff and the American company is now recovering from the shock. Even yet, however, the importations for the ten months ending April, 1915, amounted to 4,300,000 pounds. If that cent and a half duty remains in the law when the war has ended, Germany will hand the American company a side-winder from which it will never recover, and another skeleton will be found lying alongside the Democratic trail.

"OLD MAN DOODLE says that the general formula for being a reformer is to make people stop whatever they are doing, and if they are not doing anything to make them do it."

THERE are some people who will drive in from the country and leave their horse hitched on the sunny side of some sweltering street, while they hasten off to a soda fountain for relief.

WHILE still doing everything he can to maintain peace, our Uncle Sam is beginning to make a few preparations to defend himself from any possible attack.

WHEN any one tells about being crowded off the sidewalk by four or five people walking abreast, somehow no one seems to ask which sex or nationality it was that did it.

SUMMING up the results of the first year of the war, one finds that little has been accomplished beyond the transformation of Europe into a cemetery.

TENT CAMP MEETING

Services Being Well Attended Says Rev. A. G. Pontius of Church of God.

Rev. A. G. Pontius, pastor of the Church of God, assisted by Rev. S. J. Brooks of Jackson county, are holding a successful camp meeting on the Baker farm, near the Burgess school house in Hayes township.

The meetings were commenced last Sunday evening, and are being well attended. Each night shows a marked increase in attendance and interest. The meetings commence at 8:30 p. m. fast time, and will be continued indefinitely.

THEATRICAL

"September Morn," a rollicking musical comedy by Arthur Gillespie and Aubrey Stauffer, produced originally in Chicago at the LaSalle Opera-House where it made furore during a run covering 256 performances, comes to the Opera House, Thursday, September 2. It possesses much of the spectacular aspects of the Broadway "review," although distinctly a "Made in Chicago" brand of musical farce. The company to present it number fifty and among its principals will be found Harry Fields, Jacques Brazee, Harry Jones, Maxwell Sargent, Ernest Marx, Vernice Martyn, Mildred Goodfellow, Helene Hardy and May Bell Shearer. It will be given here with all the original costumes, scenery, chorus and a large corps d' ballet.

The organization is meeting with remarkable success on its tour. It is quoted as being the "one positive hit" of the present season.

Minnesota Cancels Sailing.

Officials of the Northern Michigan Transportation company notified its Charlevoix representative, O. E. Wilbur, the first of the week, that the sailing of the steamer Minnesota, due to leave Chicago on Thursday, August 26, arriving in Charlevoix on the 27th, had been canceled, and that the boat would make no more trips this season. The taking off of this boat and the Manitou making her last trip on September 5, will practically cut off all boats of the line catering exclusively to the resort business. The Steamer Missouri will continue her sailings as announced last week until further notice. The company will probably place the Illinois or some other boat on the northern run.

THE WEATHER

Weather forecast for the week beginning Wednesday, August 25, issued by U. S. Weather Bureau, Washington, D. C., for Great Lakes district:

Cool and generally fair weather will prevail for several days with possibly light frost Wednesday morning in exposed places in the Michigan Peninsula; during the second half of the week temperatures will rise with partly cloudy weather and with probably some showers over the upper Lake region.

See the Bear Skate at Charlevoix Rink next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

P. M. Makes Record Time.

Officials of the Pere Marquette railroad are pointing with considerable pride to the record of what is known as the "Resort Special," running between Chicago and Bay View from June 22 to July 31. During this period of time this train has been late in arriving at Bay View but three times, and at Chicago but 8, a record never before made by the Pere Marquette, and seldom equaled by any road operating in Michigan.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.— Benjamin Franklin.

DRESS aprons are useful additions to the wardrobe of the woman who does her own housework. These are seen at their best when colored linens are used. The tans, greens, blues, old red and brown look well with a narrow band of contrasting color or tiny piping of plain white linen bordering neck and armholes.

The same careful woman protects her hair from dust while busy about the home by wearing a dainty cap made of white mull and lace over a wire frame. This frame is turban shape and is economical inasmuch as the wire frame protects the coiffure from disarrangement.

For the housewife who thinks laudable this is the time to purchase really excellent half silk hose at the surprisingly low figure of 35 cents a pair. An inventive young woman recently purchased a dozen pairs of these hose, which were plain. She then embroidered on them small delicate designs of polka dots, tiny rosebuds and even a pattern of tiny clover blossoms done in French knot with silk of the same shade as the stockings.

If gloves or shoes of any color but black have become spotted by water and are allowed to dry there is no hope for them. They are irreparably ruined. But if, while they are still damp, they are kept on hands or feet and rubbed with a damp cloth the spots will disappear. Then brush briskly with a dry soft woolen cloth.

A young business woman manages a dainty conception in collars and cuffs over her blue serge office frock by a novel use of narrow hemstitched or embroidered edge handkerchiefs. Two handkerchiefs make a set. One is folded edgewise and cut in half. These pieces, with the cut edge hemmed, are the cuffs. The second handkerchief is also cut in half and one half hollowed out to fit the neck. The remaining half is again cut in two parts and folded over the bodice in the form of revers. These sets are inexpensive and give an attractive touch to the office dress.

FOR THE BEDROOM.

How to Make the Stranger Within Your Household Comfortable.

The first consideration for a guest is comfort. She may be delighted with the vase of flowers that greets her from a table, but she will be sure to appreciate a pretty negligee hanging in the closet. Luggage seldom arrives at its destination with the traveler, and a negligee to slip into is often a comfort indeed. Feet are apt to be tired, and until slippers arrive the feet would be glad to rest in a pair of simple bedroom slippers. These are really no trouble at all to make. You just take a pair of lamb's wool soles and a strip of ribbon long enough to go around the sole and four inches wide. One edge is sewed to the edge of the sole, and the other is turned down to make a hem through which is run a narrow elastic. This draws the ribbon up, shaping it into a shoe.

Supposing you choose blue ribbon and work a few rosebuds on the toes in embroidered silk and make a simple kimono of pale blue cotton crepe trimmed with a frill of white lace and finished with a loose belt of pink ribbon. This would be a dainty outfit and cost but little. Four yards of crepe at 15 cents a yard, plus or dowered in blue with two yards of lace at 10 cents a yard and two yards of ribbon at 12 cents a yard, will be ample. In fact, if one looked around for bargains $1 would probably cover the entire cost.

Curtains can be made before they are needed, and dainty inexpensive materials can be had in the early spring. The printed lawns in the dress goods section make the prettiest curtains. The scrim and curtain muslins are not desirable. White cotton voile can be used for the sheer curtains edged with lace. The colored curtains should be made with a valance, and if made as follows material may be saved: Cut two lengths, each measuring two and one-half yards, and sew one end. Cut a strip the entire width of the goods and twelve inches wide. Hem one raw edge and sew the selvage edges to the top of the two curtains (coating between them and making one long straight edge. Hem this and pass the rod through, then hang.

The bedspread edged with a frill might be of the same material as the curtains, and slips for cushions could be simple white material over a color or decorated in a color.

How to Use Old Felt Hats.

Instead of throwing away your old or light colored felt hats let them soak overnight in good soapuds, then wash thoroughly and let dry. You cannot buy their material for making soft shoes for the baby nor yet walking. They are soft, comfortable and can easily be kept clean. When soiled they can be washed on the washboard and molded into shape, letting them stand until dry. The cost is only a little silk thread for trimming.

An Epiphany.

Here rest the bones of William Hill, A corn fed rowed the boat; She tried to change her seat with Bill. Good night! He could not float.

Mrs. Smith said to her husband: "Mrs. Buggins is always complaining that she has so little to wear." "Well, I saw her at a ball last night," replied Mr. Smith, "and she seemed to be wearing it."

An Indian boy at Petoskey wrote the following composition on Patrick Henry: "Patrick Henry was not a very bright boy. He had blue eyes and light hair. He grew up and got married and then said: 'Give me liberty or give me death.'"

A soldier on guard in South Carolina during the war was questioned as to his knowledge of his duties. "You know your duty here, do you sentinel?" "Yes, sir." "Well, now suppose they should open on you with shells and musketry, what would you do?" "Form a line, sir." "What! One man form a line?" "Yes, sir; form a bee line for camp, sir."

Little Eleanor didn't seem to care much for her daddy. Little Eleanor's mother was an American while her father was a German. One day after Eleanor had been subjected to rather severe disciplinary measures at the hands of her stern father, she called her mother into another room, closed the door significantly and said: "Mother, I don't want to meddle in your business, but I wish you'd send that husband of yours back to Germany."

QUELLED NEAR RIOT.

Gang of Italian Reservists Subdued by Antrim County Sheriff.

Prompt action by Sheriff Wm. Kittle and his deputies nipped in the bud an incipient riot at Central Lake. The trouble started because the Pere Marquette Railroad company would not furnish free transportation to Grand Rapids for about fifty Italian reservists, who had been notified to return to Italy to fight the Germans and Austrians. The men were a part of the gang who are laying new steel on this section of the road and the railroad company wanted them to finish the portion of the job for which they were hired before it would give them free transportation back to Grand Rapids. The men locked up their time keeper, threatened to tear up the railroad tracks and were terrorizing things generally when Sheriff Kittle and his deputies arrived in answer to a hurry-up call and soon had the mob quitted and meekly parting with their coin in exchange for tickets. From off-hand judgment we would say that Bill Kittle, Ed Malby and Sam Crampton are a match for at least one Austrian army corps and we are just waiting for the bunch of ginks they quelled to get back to sunny Italy to prove it.—Bel-laire Independent.

Fish Oil in Paints.

Menhaden, or fish oil, is used in special paints which are required to stand heat and light, as on smokestacks. Such a paint is considerably more expensive than a linseed oil paint, so it can be seen that menhaden oil is a valuable aid and not an adulterant, as often claimed. Proper treatment of the oil is very expensive, as the loss by evaporation is large and certain volatile products are formed which are very offensive to the workmen. Mixed with linseed oil it is used to some extent for making waterproof paints for various purposes and seems to give good satisfaction.—Engineering Magazine.

HE WAS HUNGRY.

Under the Circumstances His Jumble of Words Was Excusable.

Professor Sigmond Freud, the eminent German scholar, has made a study of blundering blunders, spoken and printed, and has embodied the result in his book, "Psychopathology." As an example of blundering speech caused by subconscious cerebration he gives the following:

"A wealthy but not very generous American host invited his friends to an evening party. Everything went well until about midnight, when there was an intermission for supper. To the disappointment of many of the guests there was no real supper. Instead they were regaled with thin sandwiches and lemonade.

"As it was during the presidential campaign, the conversation turned upon the different candidates, and as the discussion grew warmer one of the guests, an ardent Progressive, remarked to the host:

"You may say what you please about Roosevelt, but there is one thing he can always be relied upon to do—he always gives you a square meal."

"He meant, of course, to say a 'square deal.' The assembled guests burst into a roar of laughter, to the great embarrassment both of the speaker and of the host."

Passing of Papyrus.

One of the modern mysteries of Egypt is the disappearance of the papyrus plant that once fringed the lower Nile and made a desirable haunt for water fowl. A botanist, recently from Cairo, declares that in all lower Egypt the only papyrus now growing in a natural state are in the Esbekieh Gardens fountain at Cairo, the botanical gardens and at the Barrage. Perhaps Isiah may have thrown the evil eye on the plant, for among his prophecies is the destruction of the "paper reeds by the brooks." If we did not have ancient illustrations to guide us it would be impossible from the present scanty remains to reconstruct the amazing fields of papyrus that indirectly helped to civilize us.—London Tatler.

A Town of Distinction.

"Where can one find a more filthy, hot, sweltering, odorous town than Hodeidah?" asks a recent traveler regarding that Arabian port. A filthy town it would indeed be difficult to discover, even in Asiatic Turkey, and the character of its inhabitants may be judged from the fact that the Akhdam Arabs, who are treated as outcasts by all the other tribes, have been allowed to establish themselves in Hodeidah. Nevertheless the port is the gateway to one of the most beautiful, fertile and populous regions of Arabia and had a flourishing trade in days prior to Turkish misrule.—Fall Mail Gazette.

Inflation of Automobile Tires.

It is no doubt a fact that more tires are ruined through under inflation than from all other causes combined, says Automobile Dealer. If one would keep his tires inflated to a pressure of eight or ten pounds to every inch of cross section of the tire he would be quite free from blowouts. Even during the hot weather this pressure should be maintained, as it has been conclusively proved that the extra pressure caused by friction is so small it need not be considered. But care must be taken to see that the tubes are of the best quality, for in reality the tube is the "heart" of the tire.

HOW THE HOUSEWIFE MAY SAVE ON HER GAS BILL.

The average housewife spends four times the amount of gas for cooking a meal than is necessary and at the same time positively injures food values and quality of the article she is cooking. To get the greatest amount of heat units from a gas range the flame should not be turned any higher than will give a perfect blue flame. When the flame becomes a yellowish red you are wasting gas and getting a heat that not only smokes and smudges your kitchen utensils, but decreases their longevity to one-half.

The flame should be about one-half inch of clear blue, and after the article you are cooking has come to a boiling point reduce it to a point that will just keep it boiling. This is equally true for the oven. Invariably the gas is turned too high for baking and the bread or cake is burned. This also means waste of gas and a constant anxiety about the oven, which would not be necessary if gas was used at a lower temperature.

Kuskokwim River Charted.

The recent announcement by the department of commerce of the discovery of a practical channel into the Kuskokwim river, Alaska, attracted widespread interest. The interest will be renewed by a notice just issued by the department to the effect that the coast and water survey has printed two complete charts, one of Kuskokwim bay and one of the river. Both charts are so constructed by hand as to be suitable for use in a small boat. A sufficient number of copies will be distributed to the public and should be followed by the merchant and other details of the project in the near future. These charts will be the best and most accurate to date, and will be of great value to the fisherman and the trader in the delta and a guide to follow the river channel which winds its way through the mud flats of the river bed.

UNITED DOCTORS SPECIALIST

Remarkable Success of These Talented Physicians in the Treatment of Chronic Diseases

Offer Their Services Free of Charge

The United Doctors, licensed by the State of Michigan for the treatment of deformities and all nervous and chronic diseases of men, women and children, offer to all who call on this trip, consultation, examination, advice free, making no charge whatever, except the actual cost of treatment. All that is asked in return for these valuable services is that every person treated will state the result obtained to their friends and thus prove to the sick and afflicted in every city and locality, that at last treatments have been discovered that are reasonably sure and certain in their effect.

These doctors are among America's leading stomach and nerve specialists and are experts in the treatment of chronic diseases and so great and wonderful have been their results that in many cases it is hard to find the dividing line between skill and miracle.

Diseases of the stomach, intestines, liver, blood, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, kidneys, or bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, diabetes, bed-wetting, tape worm, leg ulcers, weak lungs and those afflicted with long-standing, deep seated, chronic diseases, that have baffled the skill of the family physicians, should not fail to call. Deafness often has been cured in sixty days.

According to their system no more operations for appendicitis, gall stones, tumors, goiter, piles, etc., as these diseases are treated without operation or hypodermic injection.

They were among the first in America to earn the name of "Bloodless Surgeons," by doing away with the knife, with blood and with all pain in the successful treatment of these dangerous diseases.

If you have kidney or bladder troubles bring a two ounce bottle of your urine for chemical analysis and microscopic examination.

No matter what your ailment may be, no matter what others may have told you, no matter what experience you may have had with other physicians, it will be to your advantage to see them at once. Have it forever settled in your mind. If your case is incurable they will give you such advice as may relieve and stay the disease.

Do not put off this duty you owe to yourself or friends or relatives who are suffering because of your sickness, as a visit at this time may help you.

INDICTMENT OF BOOZE.

(By JUDGE GEMMILL, of the Municipal Court of Chicago.)

I have observed that every bandit crew that goes forth to murder starts from a saloon; that every pandarer has his rendezvous in a grogshop; that every den of thieves makes its victims drunk before it robs them; that every house of prostitution has its bar or is in partnership with booze; that every gambling den either is in a saloon or sustains a close relationship with one; that the pick-pocket "trust" is housed in a saloon; that the "pay-off joint" for the crook and the crooked policeman is in a saloon; that the professional bondsmen and character witnesses for thieves and holdup men are saloon-keepers or bartenders.

Booze has caused 200,000 divorces in the United States in the last twenty years, and adds 25,000 more to this number every year. It divides more homes, fills more jails and empties more churches than all other influences combined.

Judges, legislators, mayors, governors and even presidents sit dumb or quail in the presence of this monster, which enters millions of homes and leaves them desolate.

Booze never built a park, a playground, a school or a church, but is the enemy of them all.

War may be hell, but where it slays its thousands booze destroys its tens of thousands.

PEOPLE BUYING HOMES.

(By W. C. HOUGHINS, West Virginia Real Estate Dealer.)

"Being a real estate man, I am in a position to know whether or not the sale of whisky affects the growth of the business of the city. Prior to our campaign of 1912, the whisky interests claimed that our storehouses would be vacant, that hundreds of our dwelling houses would be tenanted, and that real estate in general would suffer great depreciation. On the contrary, I find that the storehouses and dwelling houses are now all occupied, and that there are hundreds of applicants for houses whose wants cannot be supplied at the present time. I wish to state that during this period of depression in business I am selling homes to men whom I have known for a number of years, and who are not making as much money as they were two or three years ago. These men are not investing in homes money which was saved by them when times were better, but are making small cash payments, and seem willing to assume the obligation of large monthly payments, which, in most instances, will induce the owner to sell.

"I think it would be well for men in states which contemplate having a prohibition election, to study the conditions as they now exist in West Virginia. If they are hesitating about voting the dry ticket because they fear it would hurt their community from a business standpoint."

ANOTHER BLOW FOR ALCOHOL.

Employees of the Anaconda Mining company have been given this warning in a bulletin posted by the company:

"Never go to work after drinking liquor, and if you must drink, stay home. Experience has proved that a great many accidents are caused from drinking intoxicating liquors. It will be remembered that from September 1, 1914, to September 14, all saloons in Butte were closed; that from September 14 to September 21 they were open only from 8 o'clock in the morning to 7 o'clock at night, and that for the remainder of the month they were open only from 7 o'clock in the morning to 10 o'clock at night. The accident records of the Anaconda Copper Mining company show the following significant figures: Number of accidents per ten thousand shifts: July, 6.22; August, 11.25; September, 4.21; October, 7.55; November, 6.07."

TRAVELING SALESMAN WON.

If you do not believe in the efficacy and benefits of prohibition take a trip through the state of Kansas and you will experience a change of mind. At least, that is what happened to a traveling salesman, G. N. Mahon by name, who lives in South Carolina. Mr. Mahon was a bitter opponent of prohibition because he believed it was injurious to business. After making a trip through Kansas he admitted he was converted. "The facts," he said, "are so different from the reports that have been sent out by the brewers. I have found business splendid in this state. I find a rustling and a progressive people, and the sight of towns without saloons is an inspiration. I am going right back home and take the stump for prohibition and its strict enforcement, and I am going to tell the folks there the truth about Kansas."

E. P. Ripley

On Relation of Railroads and People

The industrial leaders of this nation are talking to the public face to face through the columns of this paper. The time was when if a corporation had anything to say to the people they sent a hired, bond, whispered it through a lawyer or employed a lobbyist to explain it to the legislature, but the men who know and the men who do are now talking over the fence to the man who plays.

When the leading business men of this nation get "back to the soil" with their problems, strife and dissension will disappear, for when men look into each other's faces and smile there is a better day coming.

Mr. E. P. Ripley, president of the Santa Fe Railroad, when asked to give his views in reference to relations existing between the railroad and the public said in part:

"Frequently we hear statements to the effect that these relations are improving, that the era of railroad hating has passed and that public sentiment now favors treating the railroads fairly. As yet this change in public sentiment, if any such there be, is not effective in results.

"It is true that in the legislatures of the southwestern states during the past winter there were fewer unreasonable and unreasonable laws passed than usual, but a consideration of the hostile bills introduced shows that there is still reason for much disquiet even though they were defeated by more or less of a majority.

"Moreover, the idea that the railroads have been harshly treated does not seem to prevail in the offices of the State Railroad Commissions, which seem to cherish a notion that their business is not to act as an arbitrator between the railroads and the people, but which proceed on the theory that the railroads are able to take care of themselves and that their duty is to act as attorneys for the people even though in so doing they deny justice to the railroads. It requires no argument to demonstrate that the railroads are entitled to justice equally with other citizens and taxpayers. That they have not received it and are not receiving it is perfectly susceptible of proof. That they have practically no recourse in the courts has also been determined.

"The situation therefore is that the people, through their representatives, must elect whether the services of the railroads shall be adequately compensated or not, and it requires no fortune teller or soothsayer to predict that in the long run the service will take the class that is paid for and no better.

"The natural competition between the railroads and the natural desire to perform first-class service has heretofore resulted in giving the public much more than it was willing to pay for. Continuation of this will be impossible and no laws, however drastic, can long accomplish the impossible."

POPULAR MECHANICS

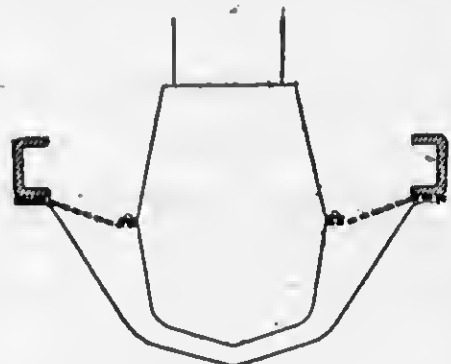

Mounting Largest Telescope.

The last annual report of the Mount Wilson observatory states that all the larger parts of the mounting for the 100 inch reflector, which will be much the largest telescope in the world, will probably be assembled at the Fort River shops, where they have been constructed, in time to permit shipment to Pasadena via the Panama canal early this year, says the Scientific American. Meanwhile the smaller parts and accessories have been under construction at the observatory. The driving clock, which is nearly completed, required more than half a ton of bronze castings and nearly a ton and a half of iron castings. In addition to the two ton driving weight. The circular steel building for this instrument is complete up to the rails which are to carry the dome. The latter has been built in Chicago and is about finished. The building and dome will probably be completed next summer so that the mounting may be set on the pier in the autumn. Meanwhile good progress has been made with the capital task of grinding and figuring the great mirror.

The Pigment Lithopane.

Lithopane is produced by mixing solutions of zinc sulphate and barium sulphide. The resulting precipitate consists of zinc sulphide and barium sulphate. It is filtered off, heated to a high temperature and dropped into water, whereby it is thoroughly disintegrated. It is washed and filtered again, dried and ground. All of these operations require a good deal of care and attention to produce a satisfactory pigment. Lithopane is very stable and is probably the whitest pigment known, being very widely used in high grade enamels. Exposed to light and dampness it darkens, but will often regain its whiteness again. It is therefore not suited to outside use by itself, but needs to have a large amount of some stable pigment combined with it.—Engineering Magazine.

Improved Automobile SOD PAN.
The usual type of sod pan used in automobile construction is fastened to the frame also members of the car and passes under the engine crank case, as shown by the full line in the sketch, says Popular Mechanics. This is not only a very heavy and expensive construction, but the pan often jars loose and must be removed from the chassis

EASILY CLEANED SOD PAN

when being cleaned. The sod pan substituted is shown by the dotted lines and simply consists of metal sheets, fastened on one side to the flange of the lower crank case and on the other to the frame side members of the chassis. This construction is cheap, very light and can easily be cleaned. The lower part of the crank case is exposed, but the dirt collected on it can be easily removed without disturbing the sod pan.

New Teltale Spark Plug.

A novel type of spark plug for internal combustion engines has been invented by a British company, says the Scientific American. The plug has a tubular central electrode, which carries a block of quartz serving the purpose of a window through which one can observe the "color" of the explosion in the combustion chamber. A dark purple spark shows the mixture to be correct; a light blue or white explosion signifies that it is too weak, while a red color indicates too rich a mixture. By simply detaching the quartz "window" and substituting a milled nut the plug is transformed into a "priming" plug, through which gasoline can be injected directly into the combustion chamber.

China Wood Oil.

Among the oils which may be added to, or used as substitutes for, linseed, in paints, perhaps tung or China wood oil is the most important. When properly boiled and treated it yields a film which is hard and elastic, with heavy body and high gloss. One great advantage of this oil is that it forms paints which will dry in damp atmospheres. It has long been used by the Chinese and Japanese and is finding wide use for marine and waterproof paints, and there is no apparent reason why it should not be used more extensively for protective paints for iron and steel.—The Engineering Magazine.

Time.

Don't thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of.—Benjamin Franklin.

OIL THE STONE ROADS.

We know now that the whole secret of holding stone roads lies in oiling them. With modern methods of oiling under pressure a surface can be maintained even under exceedingly heavy traffic. The oiling prevents the "dusting" of the roads and their consequent disintegration, which is very rapid without oiling under fast moving automobile travel. Of course, if the traffic is so heavy that it breaks down the top course of the road, that is a different matter. Roads of other than stone construction are needed to meet this condition.—John N. Carlele, Commissioner of Highways of New York.

MOTORING IN NEW YORK.

Remarkable Increase of Automobiles in New York State.

By FRANCIS M. HUGO, Secretary of State.
Nowhere during the last few years has the progress of automobilism been more rapid than in New York state. Fourteen years ago the number of motorcars running on the highways of the state was negligible, and less than 1,000 registered with the state license bureau during 1901. Today there are no less than 170,000 registered in the state alone, to say nothing of the 1,750,000 registered in other states.

There are therefore in round numbers 1,800,000 automobiles in use in the United States, more than double the total of all the other countries in the world, and a large number of these cars registered in other states motor through New York during the touring season.

One outstanding feature which makes this development so marvelous is that there are at present but a few thousand miles of good highways compared with the vast system of improved highways which is yet to be undertaken by the state. Permanent roads made of hard stone are being gradually constructed throughout the state, but these exist at present in comparatively few places, principally outside the vicinity of centers of population, while dirt roads constitute over 70 per cent of the available highways on which motorcars are operated.

In some places a maximum speed of six miles per hour limit is fixed, while in others ten miles, a speed slower than that of an ordinary horse drawn light traffic, is enforced. The police in other instances have been given extraordinary powers to effect an instant arrest in case of small offenses against bylaws or traffic rules. But many one time manifestations of prejudice have already disappeared, and the more progressive centers are devising more reasonable regulations and are considering how automobiles can be made more useful for public service.

In many cases "Joy riders" have, of course, to be dealt with like those persons who have more money than brains. They drive recklessly and endanger life, irritate the public and give motoring a bad name. But they are few in comparison with the number of motorists who drive reasonably and show every possible consideration for others.

As to the future motoring in New York, there is no doubt that before long there will be at least 200,000 registered in New York state and upward of two million cars in use in the United States, and public attention hereafter will more than ever be directed toward proper highway construction and maintenance.

POINTS FOR ROAD DRAGGING.

Pithy Advice For This Important Method of Improving Highways.

The following points are to be borne in mind in dragging a road:

Make a light drag, which is hauled over the road at an angle of about forty-five degrees, so that a small amount of earth is pushed to the center of the road.

Drive the team at a walk. Ride on the drag. Do not walk along the side.

Begin at one side of the road or wheel track, returning on the opposite side.

Drag the road as soon after every rain as possible, but not when the mud is in such a condition as to stick to the drag.

Do not drag a dry road. Drag whenever possible at all seasons of the year. If a road is dragged immediately before a cold spell it will freeze in a smooth condition.

The width of the traveled way to be maintained by the drag should be from sixteen to twenty feet. First drag a little more than the width of a single wheel track; then gradually increase until the desired width is obtained. Always drag a little earth to the center of the road until it is raised from ten to twelve inches above the edge of the traveled way.

If the drag cuts too much shorten the hitch.

The amount of earth that the drag will carry along can be very considerably controlled by the driver accordingly as he stands near the cutting edge or away from it.

The best results from dragging are obtained only by repeated applications.

Road Improvement Slow.

Only 10 per cent of all the roads in the United States have been improved. Of the individual states Ohio leads with 27 per cent of improved roads; New Jersey has 23 per cent, New York 17 per cent, or 7 per cent above the average of the country as a whole. Pennsylvania has only 4 per cent of its roads improved.

Mrs. Harriet Newman Had Lived in This Vicinity Over 56 Years.

Charlevoix again loses one of its pioneer residents in the death of Mrs. Harriet Newman, who passed away at her home south of town Monday evening the hours of 10 and 11. The direct cause of her death was a general breaking down and the infirmities of old age.

She is survived by five children—four boys and one girl: John H., Edward H. and Herbert of Charlevoix; J. Austin of Acampo, California, and daughter, Julia, who lives at the old homestead.

Mrs. Newman experienced all the hardships and privations of early pioneer life and with her deceased husband took an active part in the development of Charlevoix and immediate vicinity.

Funeral services were held from the former residence on Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. Quinton Walker, officiating. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

ACRES OF CROPS HIT BY FROST

Farmers in This Vicinity Complain of Serious Losses.

Potatoes, Corn, Cucumbers, Buckwheat and Beans Suffer Most—Whole Fields Nipped.

It is very evident that the frost of last week has done considerable damage to crops in Michigan, especially in this northern section of the state. As a result there will be small crops of cucumbers, corn, potatoes, buckwheat and beans. In this section of the state where crops are planted later, many fields have been totally destroyed before the produce has had a fair opportunity to mature. Corn will not ripen except in few localities, where perhaps it was planted in sandy soil or on highlands.

Large acreages of cucumbers and beans are ruined and the same with a vast amount of the late potatoes. Near Phelps one farmer informs us his whole acreage of potatoes were nipped to a finish. Many farmers claim only slight damage to their crops of beans, while others claim total losses. Lands near the lake suffered little, but back away from the vast body of water, fields show the stringent sting of the cold and heavy frost. In many places ice formed and the government thermometer at Petoskey registered 36. In this vicinity thermometers registered from 30 to 43 degrees. Another locality nearby records a temperature of 23 degrees.

A peculiar co-incidence is the fact that the frost of last Thursday night and the one in May both came on the 26th during a full moon and thermometers registered the same temperatures in each instance in many localities. It is reported that there will be no ripe corn and that the potato crop will only be about half, that is, ripe potatoes will be cut 50 per cent.

This year has been an exception in every way, and while it has been favorable for grain production, it has been very backward as far as tender crops are concerned. This year it was exactly three months from the time of the last frost in the spring until the first killing frost of the summer. This gives too short a season for crops to mature in this latitude. What is lost this year will be made up next year, and this is seemingly a freak of co-incidence in the domain of nature. What the loss to farmers this year will amount to, cannot be estimated, but it is safe to say that the yield of the crops hit the most, will only be about half.

Late advices from Emmet county give the estimated loss to the bean crop of that county to be $200,000, and the cucumber crop will reach the total in loss of at least $25,000. It is also estimated that the loss of all crops damaged will aggregate about $1,000,000 in that county and vicinity.

Crop May Not Be Total Loss.

Just as we were about to go to press we were given the following letter by George Brown, local manager for Chatterton & Son of Mt. Pleasant. Farmers are advised to refrain from destroying their bean crop unless entirely killed by frosts. In many instances a fair crop of beans have been harvested after the frosts have killed the leaves. Better follow the advice given in the letter below and see what the result will be. Following is the letter:

Dear Sir:—We understand that the frosts of Thursday night did considerable damage to beans in the different sections of the north. We are writing you this letter to give you a little information that may be worth a lot of money to you. We received this information from actual experience.

If the beans in your vicinity are totally lost on account of frost, if there are any pods on the vines that are large enough so that you can feel the bean on the inside, do not turn the hogs in or plow them up—let them stand just as they are and watch development.

You will be surprised to see how the bean will mature in size and you may get a much larger crop than you expected, although the quality will not be of the best they will have a good commercial value. You should let them stand three or four weeks before pulling them.

Yours truly,
Chatterton & Son.

New Rat Law in Force.

The new rat bounty law became effective on Tuesday of last week. The rats must be taken to the township clerk and then an order will be issued by the county clerk on the county treasurer. The bounty is for 5 cents each and sometimes we believe that if some good fellow would catch all the rats that seem to be around our city he would have surplus enough to buy at least a Ford.

GAME LAW FACTS

Everyone Who Hunts Off Own Premises Must Secure License.

New game law in effect on Tuesday, August 24. Everybody must be licensed and resident fee is $1.

Non-resident hunters must pay $10 to hunt, $25 for deer.

Resident hunter $1.50 for hunting deer. Land owners may hunt on own property without license.

Season on rabbits and partridge closed until October 1.

County Clerk Richard Lewis has made arrangements for the issuing of hunter's licenses under the new state game law which went into effect, August 24, and under which all hunters must be licensed.

The new law is very strict. Only landowners can hunt on their own property. The carrying of a gun on the highway or on any property not your own without a license is stipulated as prima facie evidence of guilt and arrests may be made.

FELLOWS WANTS LAW ENFORCED

"Blue Sky" Laws, Will Be Strictly Enforced Throughout State.

Prosecutor Lewis Notified by Attorney General Regarding New Statutes.

Attorney General Grant Fellows has advised Prosecuting Attorney R. L. Lewis of this county, that the "blue sky" laws for the regulation of the sale of stocks, bonds and securities, to prevent fraud, and for the regulation and inspection of companies in the business of selling such securities, has become effective and that the department is especially anxious that the statutes be enforced in every respect. The attorney general states that he considers the act the most important legislation created during the last session of the state lawmaking body.

Stating that considerable trouble was experienced in enforcing the old law of this nature because of federal suits, Attorney General Fellows advises Prosecutor Lewis to keep close account of affairs in Charlevoix county, to ascertain if there occurs any sale of stock that violates the provisions of the statutes. He states that the attorney general's department will be very willing to render any assistance needed.

The "blue sky" law is known as Act No. 46, Public Acts of 1915, and was passed to prevent fraud in the sale and disposition of stocks, bonds, or other securities, sold or offered for sale, within the state by any dealer, firm, company, association or corporation, foreign or domestic, by requiring an inspection of such stocks, bonds or securities and an inspection of the business of such persons, companies, agents, etc., offering them for sale and for the proper regulation and supervision of such business.

PARCEL POST CHANGES

Insurance on Parcel Post Packages Given—Receipts Obtained on All Packages.

Postmaster T. G. Finucan has just received the following information from Washington that a new change has been made in the rates of insuring parcels post packages. After September first the rates of insuring will be as follows: three cents up to $5.00; five cents over $5.00 up to $25.00; ten cents over $25.00 up to $50.00; and 25 cents over $50.00 up to $100.00.

Also, beginning September first, persons may obtain receipts for ordinary fourth-class parcels upon the payment of one cent. Heretofore receipts were only issued on parcels that were insured.

Sneak Thieves.

Last week some of our citizens took their well-filled lunch baskets down to the beach to enjoy a pleasant feast. Upon reaching the beach they saw their baskets down and all vigorously searched for wood to build a fire. When they returned to the place where the baskets had been left, the discovery was made that the pies, a basket of peaches and a large sack of peanuts had been taken during their absence.

This is one of the many instances of this kind that has happened throughout the summer. The boys who stole the "cents" went down ahead of the party and are known to have been making a practice of stealing from the "would-be" beach-feasters.

They brought with them 932 carloads of immigrant movables and 43 less than carload shipments. The families averaged four members each and they took up 50,000 acres of land, the average being 36.8 acres to the family. During the period of six months ending with June 30 that these figures cover, 127 families moved out of the counties making a net gain of 1,225 families or about 5,000 persons. These figures were included in Secretary Gibbon's report at the meeting of the executive committee of the bureau.

The committee decided to have an exhibit at the West Michigan Fair at Grand Rapids, but not at the Detroit fair. Exhibits will also be made at a few of the county fairs, at which the fruit display will not be prominent as in other years. This year the exhibits will be devoted to grains and potatoes with demonstrations as to the proper packing and preparing for shipment.

Some of the efforts at advertising the advantages of the region will be made during the winter, when fruit displays will be put on in windows of large business places in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Columbus and other large cities.

In connection with the bureau work, a series of lectures are to be delivered by Prof. H. G. Bell of Chicago, industrial agent of the G. R. & I. railroad company. These will be given in November according to the following schedule: November 15, Howard City; November 16, Big Rapids; November 17, Manton; November 18, Traverse City; November 19, Mancelona. These lectures will be given during the afternoon and will deal with the soil and chemical experiment tests to improve land.

ANOTHER PIONEER CALLED

Mrs. A. G. Aldrich Dies of Heart Failure Wednesday Morning.

On Wednesday morning of this week Mrs. Anna Aldrich passed away at her home, 929 State street, aged 76 years, the immediate cause of her death being heart failure. Mrs. Aldrich would have been 77 years old the 17th of September, having been born in Montreal, Canada, in 1838.

The deceased came to Charlevoix with her husband, A. G. Aldrich, in the spring of 1858. Later they moved to Chicago where they resided about 12 years, again removing to Charlevoix.

Mrs. Aldrich is survived by her aged husband and three sons, H. E. Aldrich of Cadillac, W. A. and Ernest Aldrich of Chicago, also three daughters, Miss Lizzie Aldrich of Charlevoix, Mrs. J. H. Cummings of Dowagiac and Mrs. Ella Ball of Traverse City. Two daughters and one son died some time ago. The funeral arrangements had not been made at the time of our going to press.

Novel Window Display.

Wood-Bros. have again shown considerable tact and ingenuity in their latest window display. A glimpse into the south window of their show room will make your curiosity call you to a halt. The novel creation is power driven and is filled up with the latest in time-saving electric appliances. At first one might think the miniature merry-go-round was a mere toy, but its mechanism, is such that it will carry the weight of a human being with ease. An out-of-the-way trip past the store will be well repaid by a look at this unique display.

Trout Season Closes.

Tuesday at midnight the trout season closed and put an end for this year to the fisherman who creeps along the underbrush and stealthily drops the bait into the rippling stream. The duck season opens Wednesday, September 1. Anyone can carry a gun near the water without violating any law—if, of course, he has purchased his license. However, the rabbit season is not open yet. The bunny will be safe until October 1st, when the season opens for the killing of rabbits. The season for bass fishing is still open and the angler will be able to while the hours away, even though he catches but few fish for some time.

CORN WILL NOT RIPEN THIS YEAR

Farmer Who Has a Silo is Most Fortunate This Season.

Predicted That Price of Beef Will Soar to Highest Point Before Winter is Over.

This year of all others the man who has a silo will find he has a great money-maker. The prospects are that much of the corn will not ripen. A large acreage has been replanted. This replanted corn is just getting a start but will not have a chance of getting ripe this year, because the fields have been so wet from the rains that it is impossible to cultivate sufficiently. So much of the corn crop cannot mature even with a late fall that the price of corn will undoubtedly be high. The only way for farmers, stock-raisers and dairymen to feed their cattle economically and successfully this coming winter is by having plenty of silo room to take care of this immature corn crop.

The shortage of beef cattle in this country is another reason why plenty of feed should be stored against the coming winter. Markets are going to be high on beef cattle, and the farmer who is able to finish his beef cattle upon a cheap feed is going to get the biggest gain.

The propositions before the stock-raisers and feeders in the corn belt is to grow their own feeders; not to depend upon the ranches and southern beef growers to furnish them the feeders. The dairyman who has 50 to 60 good cows can furnish his own feeders and market them as baby beef getting the cream of the market price. With plenty of corn silage there is scarcely a possibility of loss on these cattle as there would be on high-priced feeder cattle that must depend for profit on a margin between feeders and finished cattle that must depend for profit on a margin between feeders and finished beef that does not always exist. The man who has such a breeding herd and is raising good calves has on his own place, a constant and profitable market for his grain and forage crops, manure for fertilizing his land and keeping it in good condition, and when the time comes his meat animals furnish a cash crop. The silo and a breeding herd—this is the combination that the present year calls for if the farmers want to be ready to meet the conditions. When they become normal again and make themselves vastly more prosperous.

BOYNE HIT BY FIRE

Big Planing Mill of White Lumber Company Destroyed by Fire Friday Night.

One of the most spectacular fires that ever occurred in Boyne City totally destroyed the flooring plant and planing mill of the W. H. White Lumber Co. last Friday night about midnight. The origin of the fire is unknown, and the big mill in which it started is a pile of scrap and ashes.

The loss of the plant will easily reach $200,000. As near as can be learned there was about $175,000 insurance on the destroyed plant.

The superhuman efforts of the local firemen were all that saved the surrounding property and mill No. 1. An enormous amount of finished product was destroyed and this loss will reach thousands of dollars. The people who attended the Republican rally and banquet at Boyne City Friday night were able to witness this raging conflagration. The firemen saved millions of feet of lumber that was piled on the docks near the burning structure.

County Fair Notes.

Exhibitors are now sending in their lists of entries and applications for membership tickets.

A farm tractor exhibition of plowing is assured.

Three bands have already been secured.

A high woven wire fence will soon replace the old race track fence.

Prospects are bright for a successful fair.

Base ball games for Friday, September 10, have been secured—Boyne City, Charlevoix and East Jordan, will cross bats.

BLACK-MCGHAN WEDDING

Well Known Marion Young Couple Married Last Wednesday.

A very pretty wedding occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Black of Marion Center, at high noon, Wednesday, August 25, when their daughter Lyda and Mr. Alburus McGhan were united in marriage. Rev. Quinton Walker officiated, using the ring ceremony.

The bride was attended by her two friends, Florence Meggison and Katie McGhan and the groom by his brother, Vern McGhan, and Clarence Meggison. The house was prettily decorated with ferns and flowers. Only immediate relatives were present. A bounteous dinner was served, after which the young couple were accompanied as far as Petoskey by their bridesmaids and groomsmen.

Both young people are residents of Marion Center and are well known in Charlevoix and vicinity. They have the best wishes of their many friends. Mr. and Mrs. McGhan are at home to their friends on their farm in East Marion.

DEATH CLAIMS LUCY BACON

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Bacon Died Thursday at Petoskey.

Nearly Burned to Death Last May—Body Brought Home Friday.

The hand of the grim reaper ceased the sufferings of Lucy Bacon at Lockwood hospital in Petoskey last Thursday evening about 6:00 o'clock. Miss Bacon was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Bacon and was sixteen years of age.

Tuesday morning, May 18 the girl's clothing caught fire from a spark flying from the range near which she was standing and in an instant she was a mass of flames. As soon as assistance could reach her the fire was extinguished, but not before she was horribly burned. After the burned fragments of her clothing were removed it was found that the flesh on her back had been burned to a hard crisp and the front of her body terribly blistered.

Medical assistance was summoned and every possible aid rendered. The girl slowly showed signs of recovery and well established hopes for a permanent cure seemed imminent. Recently a subscription was taken up among the guests at the Beach Hotel to send the girl to the Petoskey hospital, where she was to receive special treatment. The girl was taken there by Mrs. J. S. Baker Saturday, August 14, to receive what is known as the "water bath."

Her death is a hard blow to the family and every sympathy is extended them. The body of the deceased was brought home from Petoskey Friday morning, and funeral services held at the home Saturday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock, Rev. Quinton Walker, officiating. The remains were laid at rest in Brookside cemetery.

New Liquor Law is Severe on Old Toppers

Must Have Affidavit Before They Can Buy Liquor for Their Own Use.

The first law and perhaps the one of greatest importance went into effect August 24, and puts additional restrictions on persons in dry counties wishing to have shipped in beer, whiskey or any other alcoholic beverage. The law requires such persons to go on record that the railroads may have a complete index of all persons who receive consignments of liquor.

Under the new law, before one can have liquors shipped to him, he must go before a notary public and take oath that he is of age, is not a drunkard or a tippler and that he is getting the liquor for family use in his home. Two copies of the affidavit are made, one of them to be filed with the railroad company and one with the brewery or distillery from which the liquor is obtained. New affidavits are not necessary each time liquor is ordered, the one sworn statement sufficient thereafter.

It is expected the effect of the law will be to shut off those under age and hard drinkers from getting liquor, but

I. O. O. F. PICNIC WELL ATTENDED

Over Two Hundred Members Present From Various Parts of County.

Ball Game One of Most Amusing Stunts of Day—Prominent Speakers Address Crowd.

The largest crowd in the history of the Charlevoix County Odd Fellow Picnic association was in attendance at its second annual gathering held at Horton Bay Tuesday.

During the forenoon members of the I. O. O. F. and Rebekah's arrived by vehicle, automobile and boat, until at noon the crowd had reached nearly the two hundred mark.

Shortly before noon, R. M. Cory of Boyne City, acting marshal of the day, formed the members of both orders into line, and marched from the school house to the hall, where the picnic dinners were eaten. It was originally planned to eat in the grove, but on account of the high wind, tables were spread in the hall for a majority of those present.

After the baskets had been relieved of their load of edibles, and the inner man satisfied, the crowd gathered at the M. E. church, where they were treated with some real outbursts of mirth and oratory from Judge F. H. Mayne of Charlevoix, Rev. T. Porter Bennett of East Jordan, Rev. Duffy of Boyne City, Prosecuting Attorney Sweeney of Petoskey, and R. E. Newville of Boyne City, next grand master of the supreme lodge. Not alone were the principles and aims of the order touched upon, but many sidelights as to the character of the speakers were brought to light, greatly to the amusement of those present. The talks were thoroughly enjoyed and added greatly to the enjoyment of the day.

At the close of the program, the annual election of officers took place as follows:

Bert Fuday, president, Boyne City.
W. E. Ormsby, secretary, Boyne City.
Rev. T. Porter Bennett, treasurer, East Jordan.

The executive committee was instructed to appoint committees in the various towns of the county to work in conjunction with them, and also take care of all matters pertaining to the association.

Then came the ball game between members from Charlevoix against those from Horton Bay and Boyne City. It must have been an inspiration to the onlookers, especially to the younger set. The writer, one of the Charlevoix team, was in a good physical condition at the beginning of the game, but now—stiff in every joint, one leg out of plumb, fingers sore, almost ready for the scrap heap. But there were others in the same fix and they were not all from Charlevoix either. Seven innings were played and the score was a tie—8 to 8, with a few members of each team in condition to play the remaining innings.

Thus closed a day long to be remembered and members of Horton Bay lodge are spoken of as royal entertainers. An event of this kind will be held each year, the place of the next meeting having not as yet been decided upon.

will give the occasional drinker little more trouble than laws that have been in effect for several years, regarding shipment of liquor.

Another law which becomes effective next week authorizes township boards to refuse to grant licenses, thus giving them the same right as villages or cities.

A third law empowers villages to tax and license saloons in addition to the state tax. Previously villages could tax a saloon only $500 in wet counties, but now it may be as much as decided upon, but not less than the state tax fixed by law, which is $100.

A bill, which was introduced by Representative Charles A. Hulse and passed by the last legislature, prohibits the reference to any deceased president of the United States in a liquor advertisement.

The prohibiting of the sale of liquor in lumber camps or along logging railways in the state is another law, which becomes effective this month.

Besides these laws relative to liquor traffic, a cigarette bill, introduced by Senator Morford, prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to any person under twenty-one years of age, also became effective August 24.

PEG O' MY HEART

By J. Hartley Manners

A Comedy of Youth Founded by Mr. Manners on His Great Play of the Same Title—Illustrations From Photographs of the Play

Copyright, 1913, by Dodd, Mead & Company

SYNOPSIS.

Frank O'Connell, young Irish patriot, is shot and wounded by British soldiers while making a home rule speech. He is aided by Angela Kingsnorth, an English society girl, who defends him.

Angela takes O'Connell to her brother's home and helps to nurse him. He recovers, and he and the girl become fast friends.

O'Connell when well is sent to jail for disturbing the peace. He finally writes Angela that he has finished his sentence.

O'Connell and Angela wed. One day he espoused the Irish cause. Her brother, a member of parliament, is very angry.

The happy couple come to America to live. A daughter is born to them. Angela's brother refuses to help the couple in any way. Angela dies.

O'Connell names his daughter Margaret and calls her "Peg." O'Connell receives a most important letter from England, which perplexes him.

O'Connell allows Peg to visit England at her uncle's request. The elder Kingsnorth's heart had finally softened toward his dead sister's little girl.

Peg goes to the home of the Chichester family in England at the direction of Mr. Hawkes, Kingsnorth's attorney, as Kingsnorth suddenly dies.

She first meets Ethel Chichester and pretent, a married man in love with Ethel. She interrupts them by accident in a secret meeting.

Ethel is enraged at Peg and baughtly dismisses her from the drawing room, sending her to the servants' quarters. The Chichesters have lost their money in a bank failure.

Hawkes arrives and reads the Kingsnorth will. It leaves most of the fortune to Peg and offers liberal pay to any one who will undertake her education and social training.

Mrs. Chichester finally agrees to bring up Peg in return for the money promised, although she openly despises the chabby young girl.

Peg is heartbroken at the cold reception given her by the Chichester family. She is much impressed, however, by the luxury of her surroundings.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Peg's New Surroundings.

Peg's little heart was craving for some show of kindness. If she were going to stay there she would make the best of it. She would make some friendly advances to them. She held her hand out to Mrs. Chichester.

"I'm sure I'm very grateful to you for takin' me to live with ye here. An' me father will be too. But, ya see, it's all so strange to me here, an' I'm so far away—an' I miss me father so much."

Mrs. Chichester, ignoring the outstretched hand, stopped her peremptorily.

"Go with him!" And she pointed up the stairs, on the first landing of which stood the portly Jarvis waiting to conduct Peg out of the family's sight.

Peg dropped a little courtesy to Mrs. Chichester, smiled at Ethel, looked loftily at Alaric, then ran up the stairs and, following the footman's index finger pointing the way, she disappeared from Mrs. Chichester's unhappy gaze.

"Awful!" said Alaric.

"Terrible!" agreed Mrs. Chichester. "One thing is absolutely necessary," Mrs. Chichester went on to say—"she must be kept away from every one for the present."

"I should say so!" cried Alaric energetically. Suddenly he ejaculated: "Good Lord! Jerry—he mustn't see her!"

She watched the disappointed Ben nett leave the room and then began a tour of inspection. She had never seen so many strange things outside of a museum.

Fierce men in armor glared at her out of massive frames; old gentlemen in powdered wigs smiled pleasantly at her; haughty ladies in breath hereatbig collures stared superciliously right through her. She felt most uncomfortable in such strange company.

On the piano she found a perfectly carved bronze statuette of Cupid. She gave a little effish cry of delight, took the statuette in her arms and kissed it. "Cupid, me drillin'! Faith, it's you that causes all the mischief in the world, ye divil ye!" she cried.

All her depression vanished. She was like a child again. She sat down at the piano and played the simple refrain and sang in her little girlish tremulous voice one of her father's favorite songs, her eyes on Cupid:

"Oh, the days are gone when beauty bright
My heart's charm wove;
When my dream of life, from morn till night,
Was love, still love!
New hope may bloom
And days may come
Of milder, calmer beam.
But there's nothing half so sweet in life
As love's young dream!
No, there's nothing half so sweet in life
As love's young dream."

As she let the last bars die away and gave Cupid a little caress and was about to commence the next verse a vivid flash of lightning played around the room followed almost immediately by a crash of thunder.

Peg covered down into a deep chair. The old laughter died from her face and the joy in her heart. She made the sign of the cross, knelt down and prayed.

Into the room through the window came a young man, his coat collar turned up, rain pouring from his hat. Inside his coat was a terrified looking dog. The man came well into the room, turning down the collar of his coat and shaking the moisture from his clothes when he suddenly saw the kneeling figure of Peg. He looked down at her in surprise. She was intent on her prayers.

"Hello!" cried the young man. "Frightened, eh?"

Peg looked up and saw him staring down at her with a smile on his lips. Inside his coat was her precious little dog, trembling with fear. The porter barked loudly when he saw his mistress. Peg sprang up and clutched Michael away from the stranger just as another blinding flash played around the room, followed by a deafening report.

Peg ran across to the door, shouting: "Shut it out! Shut it out!" She stood there trembling, covering her eyes with one hand; with the other she held on to the overjoyed Michael, who was winking with glee at seeing her again.

The amazed and amused young man closed the windows and the curtains. "Don't come near the dog, sir! Don't come near it!" She opened a door and found it led into a little reception room. She fastened Michael with a piece of string to a chair in the room and came back to look again at the stranger, who had evidently rescued her dog from the storm. He was a tall, bronzed, athletic looking, broad shouldered young man of about twenty-six, with a pleasant, genial, magnetic manner and a playful humor lurking in his eyes.

As Peg looked him all over she found that he was smiling down at her. "Does the dog belong to you?" he queried.

"What were you doin' with him?" she asked in reply.

"I found him harking at a very high spirited mare."

"Mare?" cried Peg. "Where?"

"Why put up with this annoyance at all?" asked Ethel.

Mrs. Chichester put her arm around Ethel as she said:

"One thousand pounds a year, that is the reason."

"Wait a minute, water," put in Alaric, "and I'll go with you as far as the station road and see if I can bend Jerry off. His train is almost due if it's punctual."

He was genuinely concerned that his old chum should not meet that impossible little red headed Irish beauty whom an unkind fate had dropped down in their midst.

At the hall door Mrs. Chichester told Jarvis that her niece was not to leave her room without permission.

As Mrs. Chichester and Alaric passed out they little dreamed that the same relentless fate was pursuing still further humiliations for the unfortunate family and through the new and unwelcome addition to it.

Peg was shown by the maid, Bennett, into a charming old world room overlooking the rose garden. Everything about it was in the most exquisite taste. The furniture was of white and gold, the vases of Sevres, a few admirable prints on the walls and roses everywhere.

Left to her reflections, poor Peg found herself wondering how people with so much that was beautiful around them could live and act as the Chichester family apparently did. They seemed to borrow nothing from their once illustrious and prosperous dead. They were, it would appear, only concerned with a particularly near present.

The splendor of the house awed—the narrowness of the people irritated her. What an unequal condition of things where such people were endowed with so much of the world's goods while her father had to struggle all his life for the bare necessities!

Very much comforted by the reflection and having exhausted all the curious things in the little manor room, she determined to see the rest of the house. First she changed to another dress.

At the top of the stairs she met the maid Bennett.

"Mrs. Chichester left word that you were not to leave your room without permission. I was just going to tell you," said Bennett.

All Peg's independent Irish blood boiled up. What would she be doing shut up in a little white and gold room all day? She answered the maid excitedly:

"Tell Mrs. Chichester I am not going to do anything of the kind. As long as I stay in this house I'll see every bit of it!" and she swept past the maid down the stairs into the same room for the third time.

"You'll only get me into trouble," cried the maid.

"No, I won't. I wouldn't get you into trouble for the world. I'll get all the trouble, an' I'll get it now."

Peg ran across, opened the door and meeting with the maid called out:

"Aunt! Cousin! Aunt! Come here; I want to tell ye about meself!"

"They've all gone out," said the maid quickly.

"Then what are ye makin' such a fuss about? You go out too."

She watched the disappointed Bennett leave the room and then began a tour of inspection. She had never seen so many strange things outside of a museum.

Fierce men in armor glared at her out of massive frames; old gentlemen in powdered wigs smiled pleasantly at her; haughty ladies in breath hereatbig collures stared superciliously right through her. She felt most uncomfortable in such strange company.

"What were you doin' with him?" she asked in reply.

"I found him harking at a very high spirited mare."

"Mare?" cried Peg. "Where?"

"Tied to the stable door."

"The stable door? Is that where they put Michael?" Once again the lightning flashed vividly.

Peg shivered.

The stranger reassured her. "Don't be frightened. It's only a summer storm."

"Summer or winter, they shiver me up," gasped Peg. She looked at the young man and said in an awestruck voice:

"They say if ye look at the sky when the lightning comes ye can see the kingdom of heaven. An' the sight of it blinds some and kills others—accordin' to the state of grace ye're in."

"You're a Catholic?" said the stranger.

"What else would I be?" asked Peg to surprise.

Again the lightning lit the room. Peg closed her eyes again and shivered.

"Doesn't it seem he is angry with us for our sins?" she cried.

"With me perhaps—not with you," answered the stranger.

"What do ye mean by that?" asked Peg.

"You don't know what sin is," replied the young man.

"An' who may you be to talk to me like that?" demanded Peg.

"My name is Jerry," he said.

"Jerry?" And Peg looked at him curiously.

"Yes. What is yours?"

"Peg!" And there was a sudden note of fixed determination in her tone.

"Peg, eh?" And the stranger smiled. She nodded and looked at him curiously. What a strange name he had—Jerry! She had never heard such a name before associated with such a distinguished looking man.

"Jerry, did ye say?"

"Just plain Jerry," he answered cheerfully. "And you're Peg."

She nodded again, with a quick little smile. "Just plain Peg."

"I don't agree with you," said the young man. "I think you are very charming."

After a pause he went on, "Who are you?"

"I'm me aunt's niece," replied Peg, looking at him furtively.

Jerry laughed again.

"And who is your aunt?"

"Mrs. Chichester," asked Jerry in surprise.

"That's it," said Peg.

"How extraordinary!"

"Isn't it? Ye wouldn't expect a fine lady like her to have a niece like me, would ye?"

"That isn't what I meant," corrected Jerry.

"Yes, it is what ye meant. Don't tell untruths with the storm ragin' outside," replied Peg.

"I was thinking that I don't remember Alaric ever telling me that he had such a charming cousin."

"Oh, do you know Alaric?" asked Peg, with a quick smile.

"Very well," answered Jerry.

Peg's smile developed into a long laugh.

"And why that laugh?" queried Jerry.

"I'd like me father to see Alaric. I'd like him just to see Alaric for me minute. He's such a conceited person."

"I admire your delightful accent," replied Jerry.

"Accent in it?" And Peg looked at him in astonishment. "Sure, I've no accent. I just speak naturally. It's you have the accent to my way of thinkin'."

"Really?" asked the amused Jerry.

Peg imitated the young man's well bred, polished tone:

"What ye bawn then?"

Jerry laughed immoderately. Who was this extraordinary little person?

Was the one thought that was in his mind.

Peg and Jerry.

Peg went haphazardly around the room examining everything, sitting in various kinds of chairs, on the sofa, smelling the flowers, and wherever she went Jerry followed her at a little distance.

"Are you going to stay here?"

"Mebbe I will and mebbe I won't."

"Did your aunt send for you?"

"No, me uncle—me Uncle Nat."

"Nathaniel Kingsnorth?" cried Jerry in amazement.

Peg nodded.

Entered at Charlevoix Postoffice as second class matter.

THE failure of the Democrats to pass the post office appropriation bill in the last Congress has shamefully crippled the rural free delivery service.

Members of Congress declare that complaints they are receiving from both rural carriers and patrons have been more numerous and bitter in the last few months than for years before.

Rural carriers claim that they have suffered chiefly on two counts; one that although they are under Civil Service, there have been hundreds of dismissals without just cause; the other that their routes have been lengthened and their work increased without additional pay.

The complaints from patrons of the rural routes are uniformly based upon sweeping reductions in the service.

The conditions causing these complaints are due to the failure of the post office appropriation bill and the consequent necessity for managing the postal service under a re-enactment of last year's appropriation.

The principal changes ordered by the department reducing the carrier force arise, first, by the proposed consolidation of about 1500 routes 25 miles long into half that number 50 miles long; second, in lengthening the standard routes and still further reducing the carrier force; third, by making one carrier serve two routes on alternate days, and dropping the extra carrier. It is estimated that more than two thousand rural carriers have lost their places under these reductions.

The patrons of the rural routes have their criticisms, first, on the claim that many have had to move their mail boxes at least half a mile from former locations, and they, instead of the carriers, must travel that distance for mail; second, that instead of getting mail six times a week they receive it only every other day; third, all these changes cripple the effectiveness of the parcel post service, especially as to perishable goods. There is also a general complaint of curtailment of the rural free delivery service.

Mass meetings of patrons have been held in many localities protesting against the demoralization of their service, and are daily becoming more frequent.

Reports from associations of rural carriers claim that not only have the men lost their enthusiasm for the service, but through fear of dismissal have resigned. This is largely the result, it is said, of department instructions to have Democratic postmasters, instead of civil service inspectors, make confidential reports upon the qualifications of carriers as a basis for reductions. This arrangement has opened the way to rank discrimination in favor of Democratic carriers.

WHEN some men instead of going to church Sunday set out to worship God in the temple of nature, it always seems to take a lot of bottled goods to do it appropriately.

BOTH the allies and the Tuetons affirm that God is with them. Well, maybe they are right. The catechism used to say that God is everywhere.

GERMANS say there is no cause to worry about the Dardanelles. How about the public which reads about 'em every day?

IF this country should have spanked Mexico the exercise might be good for Uncle Sam's arms.

BUT how can a nation that has a Roosevelt be called unprepared for war?

Has Your State Done This Yet?

Why is it? If a railway president issues an order forbidding the use of liquor by his corporation's employees, that railway forthwith rises in public esteem and confidence. But when the Governor of a state sends out a similar warning to three thousand public servants, half of the nation sneers. Tell us why the state of Kansas has forbidden its "help" to use liquor. It is the first State to do so and won't be the last. For more than thirty years Kansas has had prohibition, and it knows that prohibition pays. Governor Capper sagely remarks that the wonder is that a ban on booze by state employees has not been applied before. One reason, that seems to us, is that few lawmakers hold office in Kansas anyway. The "bank" is still a hero in some lands, but hasn't been honored in Kansas for several decades. The jokesmiths are entitled to claim first laugh at each new piece of "Kansas lunacy," but Kansas usually laughs last and heartiest.—Collier's Weekly.

All-Aboard Chestnut Specials

"Say ma," said Willie, "do you know, I think that that ash man that comes and dumps our ashes every week is a real good Christian man?" "Why so?" asked his mother. "Well yesterday he came to Mrs. Smith's house next door and picked up their wooden barrel and raised it over his head and was about to dump it in his cart when the bottom came out and ashes fell all over him." "My how terrible," said Willie's mother, "and what did he do?" "Oh, he just sat down in the gutter and told God all about it."

A certain member of our state legislature was very much impressed with the dignity of his position and it was always on his mind. One night his wife woke him and whispered: "Henry, there are burglars in the house." "You must be mistaken, my dear," said her husband, "there may be a few in the Senate, but in the House—oh, no; the idea is preposterous."

Two doctors were operating on a man for appendicitis. After the operation was completed one of the doctors missed a small sponge. The patient was reopened, the sponge found within and the man sewed up again. Immediately the second doctor missed a needle. Again the patient was opened and closed. "Gentlemen, said the victim, they were about to close him up for the second time, 'for heaven's sake, if you're going to keep this up, put buttons on me.'"

A commercial traveler who was putting up for the night at a hotel in a small town about the size of Ellsworth, ordered breakfast for the early morning train. The good landlady herself prepared the meal, and while she was at it, not wishing her guest to be late, sent the new kitchen maid upstairs to see if the gentleman was up. Peering thru the keyhole, the servant, a raw country girl, espied the commercial traveler at the dressing table using his tooth-brush. Rushing downstairs she surprised her mistress by reporting: "It's all right, mum; he'll be down directly. He's sharpening his teeth."

Is There Money in It?

In the newspapers recently we saw headlines such as these: "Demon rum" laughs at the water wagon, despite nation wide prohibition move, "whisky trust" shows growing profits. The text reveals the financial marauds of the Distillers' Securities Corporation, sometimes called the "whisky trust"—and the marvels do not justify the headlines.

The annual report of the concern states that in the last three years, on a capital stock of $30,843,480, the total net profit earned was $2,492,303, or shade under 2.7 per cent per annum! The "demon" is laughing on the wrong side of his mouth. Over half the total profit noted above was made in the past year, during which time the Distillers' Securities Corporation, through a subsidiary, has been furnishing enormous quantities of denatured alcohol to England and France for war purposes. The money in whisky seems to be making something else.—Collier's Weekly.

ERFOURTH-ROENFELDT

Popular Young Teacher United in Marriage to Well Known Resident of Hayes.

Fred Erfourth of Horton Bay and Miss Irene Roenfeldt of Hayes township were married Tuesday by Rev. L. C. Vinyard, pastor of the Baptist church. The groom is one of Charlevoix county's promising school teachers and is well and favorably known. The bride is the daughter of Claus Roenfeldt, a well known Hayes township farmer, and enjoys a large circle of acquaintanceship among the younger set of that community.

Mr. and Mrs. Erfourth left the same day for Horton Bay, where Mr. Erfourth will teach during the coming school year, and also make their future home. They have the congratulation of a host of friends for a long and prosperous life's journey.

F-4 Raised.

After having been at the bottom of the ocean since March 23, the United States submarine F-4 was floated Sunday. It was towed to the quarantine station in Honolulu bay and was dry-docked Sunday. The submarine was raised by six special pontoons, each with a lifting capacity of 60 tons. The craft lay in 270 feet of water. The F-4 was commanded by Lieut. A. L. Eide and carried a crew of 21 men. At the time of the Courier going to press two bodies had been removed from the boat.

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

Duck farming is becoming more profitable year by year. People are learning that ducks are the hardest of domestic fowls and are the easiest to feed. Matured ducks of the larger breeds are worth $1 to $1.25 each dressed. The feathers add a few cents to this.

Ducklings grow fast and reach a nice roasting size at two months, it being quite common to get a four pound fowl at this age. They are a great delicacy then, and as they bring a higher rate per pound than when matured it is considered most profitable to market them at a weight of three to four pounds. Their feed up to this time should consist mainly of bru or shorts wet to a thin mash with skim milk, adding a little cornmeal. Stale bread or crackers soaked with skim milk will also do nicely. They need a clover patch to run in. Garden stuff is excellent. A little cracked corn is needed in the last two weeks. In raising ducks to an age of six or eight months considerable grain is required in addition to the mash and green stuff.

From time of hatching to five days old provide the following mixture. Cracker or bread crumbs and cornmeal, equal parts by measure; hard boiled eggs, 15 per cent of the total bulk of crackers and meal; sand, 5 per cent of the total of crackers and meal. Mix with water or milk and feed four times a day.

From five to twenty days old the following mixture: Wheat bran or shorts, two parts by measure; cornmeal, one part; rolled oats, 50 per cent of this bulk; beef scraps, 5 per cent.

AYLESBURY DUCK

sand, 5 per cent; green food, 10 per cent. Mix with water to a dry, crumbly state and feed four times a day.

From twenty to forty-two days old the following mixture: Wheat bran or shorts, two parts by measure; cornmeal, one part; beef scraps, 5 per cent of this bulk; sand, 5 per cent; green food, 10 per cent. Mix with water to a dry, crumbly state and feed four times a day.

From forty-two to seventy days old the following mixture: Cornmeal, two parts by measure; wheat bran or shorts, one part; beef scraps, 10 per cent of this bulk; coarse sand or grit, 5 per cent; green food, 10 per cent. Mix with water to a dry, crumbly state and feed four times a day.

Of all ducks for farm and practical purposes none stands higher in popular esteem than the White Pekking. It is valuable for raising on a large scale and is the most easily raised of all. It is a very hardy bird and must be handled quite carefully. It was imported from China in the early seventies and has steadily grown in popularity since its introduction into this country.

The White Aylesbury ducks are second to the popular Pekking for market purposes and are bred in large numbers in Europe. In this country they are not so extensively bred as the Pekking; neither have they been found so good as the latter.

The Colored Hovsen duck is called deservedly "popular" throughout this country and is considered one of the most profitable varieties to keep. By some raisers the Cayuga is considered to be as good as the Pekking for early markets, and the claim is made that it can be grown as cheaply. The Indian Runner is best for egg production, but is not equal to the others for meat.

Ducks should have a snug shelter for nights. A swimming pond or creek is not needed, but they need a trough for splashing and washing. They consume a lot of clean water.

Ducks usually lay their eggs early in the morning, and they often prefer to drop these eggs in any mud puddle about the barn lot, or as they swim in the creek. But if a house is provided they will lay in their nests. If kept up until 4 or 10 o'clock in the morning, nests can be made for the layers along one of the walls by nailing little boards about fifteen inches apart to this wall. These form a sort of stall, into which you place straw. Nail a low cleat along the nest fronts, close to the floor. This prevents the eggs rolling out and does not hinder the duck stepping into her laying stall.

Keep the Bull in Bounds. The bullpen is a necessity on every farm. It is unwise and injudicious to allow the bull to run at liberty with the cattle.

LAND FIGHTING NOT CLEAN.

The Naval Captain Preferred His Battles on the Open Sea.

When Vern Cruz was besieged in the Mexican war Captain Robert E. Lee, afterward the commander in chief of the Confederate army, was ordered to throw up breastworks to defend a battery manned by the families of a man of-war. Lee put the families into the trenches and soon had the dirt flying, but the sailors did not labor cheerfully. They resented having to shovel dirt, and their captain remonstrated openly with Lee.

"My men," he said, "do not want mud banks to hide behind; just let them get out and do the enemy."

But Lee would not listen, and the men sweated away at the shoveling. Presently the Mexicans opened fire at the very point thus protected, and the sailors were glad to seek the shelter of the despised dirt. The ship's captain felt that he owed Lee an apology and made a handsome one.

"Well, Captain Lee," he stammered, "I reckon you were right. I suppose the dirt did save some of my boys from being killed or wounded, but you know we sailors have no use for dirt banks on shipboard. All we want is a clear deck and an open sea. The fact is, captain, I don't like this land fighting, anyway. It isn't clean."—Youth's Companion.

PACKING FOR A JOURNEY.

Here is a Schema That May or May Not Be of Help.

Jerome K. Jerome recalled with reverence a habit of his methodical uncle, who was a great traveler and who, before packing for a journey, always "made a list." This was the system which he followed, gathered from his uncle's own lips:

Take a piece of paper and put down on it everything you can possibly require. Then go over it and see that it contains nothing you can possibly do without.

Imagine yourself in bed. What have you got on? Very well; put it down, together with a change. You get up. What do you do? Wash yourself. What do you wash yourself with? Soap. Put down soap. Go on till you have finished. Then take your clothes. Begin at your feet. What do you wear on your feet? Boots, shoes, socks. Put them down. Work up till you get to your head. What do you want besides clothes? Put down everything.

This is the plan the old gentleman always pursued. The list made, he would go over it carefully to see that he had forgotten nothing. Then he would go over it again and strike out everything he would lose the list.

Turner's Little Afterthought.

An English critic's reference to Turner's fine picture "The Wreck Buoy" reminds a faithful newspaper reader of a curious anecdote in connection with it. When Turner first sent this picture to the Royal academy it was hung among several brilliantly colored pictures. On varnishing day Turner found the effect of his dull gray rendering of a stormy sea altogether spoiled by its bright surroundings. Without a moment's hesitation he painted in the lighted buoy in the foreground, and its dab of crimson light showed so brilliantly in its gloomy setting that Turner's picture became the prominent one, and its rivals on each side were cast into the shade. It is curious, if true, that the most noticeable feature of the picture should have been an afterthought.

M. E. Church Makes Good Showing.

A review of the work of the First M. E. church for the fiscal year September 1st, reported at the fourth quarterly conference, by the pastor and officers of the church, shows a very gratifying increase in all departments of church work. Besides seventy-five conversions during the past year and fifty accessions to church membership, there has been an increase of about $200.00 in the missionary offering over last year, and that was the best in the history of the local church. The Sunday School and Epworth League all showed a very satisfactory, healthy growth. The pastor, Rev. Quinton Walker, was given a unanimous invitation to return for another year.

HOW TO PROVIDE THE HOME WITH SEVERAL USEFUL ARTICLES.

A simple and ingenious device has been created to take care of the dolly. Without requiring much space and insuring freedom from creases and dust, the new cretune dolly rolls will be found delightfully serviceable.

To a cretune covered pole about three inches in diameter and a foot or two in length is attached a piece of the material, which winds about the dolly and the pole and ties in a small bow.

Particularly serviceable for tea under the trees is the lace cake cover. This, square or elliptical in shape and in various sizes, will keep insects and falling leaves from the dish. It is made on a wire frame, simply covered with lace in a fillet pattern.

Less expensive than the telephone dolls and less suggestive of Victorianism are the telephone screens, which are very attractive and easily made. A small screen frame of wire or wood is covered with silk. Gold lace and blue rosebuds may be used for trimming, with a braiding or cord about the edges.

The lamp and lamp shade are undergoing more metamorphoses than any other single article of furnishing. The newest form is that of the shade charmingly stencilled in silhouettes. A wooden stand for desk or table or even tall enough for the floor, painted in canary yellow and black or ivory and black, is surmounted by a canary or ivory shade. On the yellow or ivory ground are stencilled the most delicate of silhouettes and copies of old and modern masterpieces. Exquisite bits of spirit life disport themselves with all the dainty vigor of which they are capable. While the best effect is obtained when the lamp is illuminated the black figures hold their own excellently in an outside light.

TO IMPROVE THE FRUIT.

Thinning Advised For Those Who Want Product of High Quality.

To many it is a waste of time and labor to thin fruit trees, but with few exceptions it should be done. When the tree bears a light crop little thinning is necessary, but since most trees bear too much it is necessary to thin them to obtain fruit of proper quantity and quality. The purpose of thinning is to secure large, healthy, well flavored fruit in pulling out the knotty, diseased, or injured ones, in order to prevent waste, feed the culls to hogs and poultry.

Culling out can be gauged by no fast rule. It is within overdone since the fruit grows fast up to harvest time. It is best to pull each wormy and lighted fruit. Such fruit will either drop from the tree before picking or prove worthless for storage or marketing.

Thinning will also prevent good fruit from contamination. In addition, the remaining fruit has a greater chance of development because the tree is not called upon to nourish those infested. The fruit produced from trees that have been thinned is of far superior quality. American Agriculturist.

To Cut Strawberry Runners.

When strawberries are not allowed to run over the bed, but are cultivated in hills, an impediment for cutting the runners is a necessity. One of the simplest as well as one of the best is shown in the figure. The cutters are cut disks from a disk harrow or cultivator and must be kept well sharpened to do their best work. The axle may be made of any bolt of suitable size threaded on both ends so that a nut and washer may be placed on each side of the disk. This clamps the two disks tightly to the axle and prevents them from revolving independently of each other. The handle should be made similar to a lawn mower handle.

The disk can be set at various widths, depending on the size of hills desired, about eight to ten inches being usual. By setting the plants in check row fashion the tool can be run in both directions, making the operation of cutting the runners a short one even over a large extent.

A Hint For Pasture.

There are many known instances where it has been a hindrance for pasturing both horses and cattle without any infectious results, but as a matter of fact there is always a little danger in pasturing cattle in alfalfa. They should be kept away from the crop gradually, and they should never be turned into an alfalfa field when they are hungry. When cattle are pastured on alfalfa one must always be prepared to find a case of blotting—town household.

"Don't have to. I look at the towel," joyfully rejoined Willie. "Knowing's Magazine."

Remarkable Success of These Talented Physicians

in the Treatment of Chronic Diseases

The United Doctors, licensed by the State of Michigan for the treatment of deformities and all nervous and chronic diseases of men, women and children, offer to all who call on this trip, consultation, examination, advice free, making no charge whatever, except the actual cost of treatment. All that is asked in return for these valuable services is that every person treated will state the result obtained to their friends and thus prove to the sick and afflicted in every city and locality, that at last treatments have been discovered that are reasonably sure and certain in their effect.

These doctors are among America's leading stomach and nerve specialists and are experts in the treatment of chronic diseases and so great and wonderful have been their results that in many cases it is hard to find the dividing line between skill and miracle.

Diseases of the stomach, intestines, liver, blood, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, kidneys, or bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, diabetes, bed-wetting, tape worm, leg ulcers, weak lungs and these afflicted with long-standing, deep seated, chronic diseases, that have baffled the skill of the family physicians, should not fail to call. Dizziness often has been cured in sixty days.

According to their system no more operations for appendicitis, gall stones, tumors, goiter, piles, etc., as these diseases are treated without operation or hypodermic injection.

They were among the first in America to earn the name of "Bloodless Surgeons," by doing away with the knife, with blood and with all pain in the successful treatment of these dangerous diseases.

If you have kidney or bladder troubles bring a two ounce bottle of your urine for chemical analysis and microscopic examination.

No matter what your ailment may be, no matter what others may have told you, no matter what experience you may have had with other physicians, it will be to your advantage to see them at once. Have it forever settled in your mind, if your case is incurable they will give you such advice as may relieve and stay the disease.

Do not put off this duty you owe to yourself or friends or relatives who are suffering because of your sickness, as a visit at this time may help you.

Worn-out and run-down men or women, no matter what your ailment, consult them. It costs you nothing.

Remember, this last free offer is for this visit only.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

(Conducted by "The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.")

FOR VALUE RECEIVED.

The liquor interests have unwittingly given prohibition in West Virginia much valuable publicity. Their frantic efforts to prove that a deficit in the state treasury is due to the loss of liquor revenue has called forth from loyal citizens of the "little mountain state" strong testimonies on the subject. In the light of the moral, social and economic benefits derived from the prohibitory law, testified to by men of every class, a deficiency of a few thousand dollars seems of comparatively little importance.

As a matter of fact the loss of the $600,000 a year in revenue to West Virginia as a result of the adoption of the constitutional prohibition amendment does not impose upon the individual taxpayer any burden worth considering. In a letter written by the state auditor, which has recently been made public, he shows that five cents additional state taxes on the hundred-dollar valuation will take care of the money loss on liquor licenses. This would cost a man whose property was assessed at $1,000, fifty cents; if he has $2,000 worth, he would have to pay one dollar, and if he had $10,000, he would be obliged to expend five dollars. So much for the enormous load of taxation being thrust upon the property owners of the state because of prohibition! The payment of such insignificant amounts would certainly appeal to a level-headed business man as a mighty good investment.

DRINKERS' DEATH RATE HIGH.

Startling evidence of the effect of alcohol on the moderate drinkers is offered by the Life Extension Institute. The bulletin issued to its members shows that in one Canadian and three British life insurance companies the mortality among so-called moderate drinkers, accepted as temperate and healthy risks, exceeded the death rate among the abstainers by 78, 37, 52 and 44 per cent, respectively.

New data was recently compiled by forty-three American life insurance companies, covering a period of twenty-five years, with the following results: Steady moderate drinkers, accepted as standard risks, death rate 86 per cent above the average. Former drinkers (admitting past excesses), death rate 50 per cent above the average. Very moderate drinkers, 18 per cent above the average.

"Experimental laboratory work," says the board of scientific authorities, "has kept pace with statistical investigation, and the knowledge gained from the laboratory, not only in experiments on animals, but on man himself, shows that a higher death rate among alcohol users is what we would naturally expect to find in the light of what we know regarding its effects on the body."

POOR OLD JOHN.

John Barleycorn the swaggering, just now is badly staggering beneath repeated blows for kings say, "He is ruinous—dog-dog the stuff he's brewed in us," and hit him on the nose. The kings, alert and vigorous, are taking measures rigorous, to swat old John again: "He's worse than guns and sabers are," remark the kings, "his labors are addressed to drowning men. Out where our flags are shimmering the bottle must go glimmering. It makes the soldier ruder; it spoils the ardent warrior, and nothing could be sorer than fighting men half stewed." Thus speak the Lord's anointed ones, and they are the up-pointed ones their people's weal to guard; they see that John, the lecherous, is vicious, mean and treacherous, and so they seek him hard. And if, in Europe's villages, old John, who slays and pillages, runs up against a frost, the war, with all its slaughtering, that leaves the nations tottering, is well worth what it cost.—Walt Mason.

ATTITUDE OF CATHOLIC CHURCH.

"All the great Catholic societies refuse membership to those engaged in the liquor business," says Mr. John P. Cunneen, prominent Catholic and labor leader. "In Maine the Catholics have a majority of the church membership, and you know how Maine stands on the liquor question. In Cambridge, Mass., the Catholic church membership equals 71 per cent of the total church membership, and for 28 years Cambridge has outlawed the saloon. While the Catholic may vote as he pleases upon the saloon question, the church gives him no argument in favor of the saloon. On the contrary, all the arguments are against it. Rev. James E. Casady of Fall River, Mass., once said: 'You dare not pray for the saloon.' No Catholic who follows Father Casady's advice will vote for the saloon."

INCREASED POPULATION.

We learn from United States census bulletins that of the nine middle western states Kansas, from 1900 to 1910, increased in population 15 per cent; Missouri, 6 per cent; Wisconsin, 12; Nebraska, 11; Indiana, 7; Michigan, 12; Minnesota, 18. In spite of the growth of Chicago, Illinois increased but 17 per cent. Iowa shows an actual loss of 3 per cent. Of the states mentioned, Kansas is the only one that advanced during the ten years in both crops and manufactures.

OUR PUBLIC FORUM

Peter Radford
On Church and State

The recent action of one of the leading churches of this nation, in annual convention, demanding that the laymen vote only for candidates for office whose views coincide with those of the clergy on one of the leading political issues, and direct and indirect efforts of other church organizations to interfere with the freedom of the ballot, make one of the greatest perils of this age, and present a problem that should receive thoughtful consideration of both laymen and citizens.

Suckling babes may well squirm in their cradles when ministers in convention assemble, release the hearts of men and grab them by the throat, for Christianity has broken down, religion has become a farce, and the pulpit a failure. When the church substitutes force for persuasion, command for conviction and coercion for reason, the sheriff had as well pass the sacrament, plain-clothes men take charge of the altar and policemen bury the dead, for why a church?

It is as dastardly a crime against government for a minister to undertake to deliver the votes of his parishioners to a candidate, as it is for a ward heeler to deliver a block of votes to a political boss, and both ought to be prosecuted, for the law should be no respecter of persons.

It is as objectionable for a convention of ministers to seek by canonical law to control the votes of church members as it would be for a convention of manufacturers to issue orders for their employees to vote for a certain candidate. Such conduct is offensive to decency, business morals and a crime against society. Any convention, whether composed of saints or sinners, rich or poor, white or black, that seeks to prostitute power and coerce conscience ought to be broken up by the police and its leaders arrested for treason.

A crime by any other name is a crime just the same. An ecclesiastical robe cannot sanctify treason, authority to preach does not carry with it license to become a political ringster, or the right to teach us how to pray give a permit to tell us how to vote. No man is joining the church should sacrifice his citizenship, forfeit his constitutional liberties or subordinate his duty to the state. The earth many times has been drenched with the blood of our forefathers fighting to throw off the ecclesiastical yoke from the state, and the suggestion of a return to these medieval conditions with their horror and their torture should not be tolerated for a moment.

Laws should be passed prohibiting any preacher, or combination of preachers, from delivering or attempting to deliver their membership or congregation to any candidate for office, and suitable legislation should be passed preserving the sanctity of the pulpit from political vandalism. It is as much a menace to church and state for a politician to occupy the pulpit as for a minister to preach a political sermon. He has no more right to preach his politics from the pulpit than a teacher has to teach his politics to his pupils. A preacher cannot make political rickety righteous by usage any more than he can make profane respectable by practice. It is one of the ironies of fate that a preacher may become a scandal as well as a glory to civilization.

POULTRY NOTES.

In the purchase of a brooder hover see that there is some method of supplying fresh air under the hover.

A chick must be kept warm the first ten days or it gets bowel trouble.

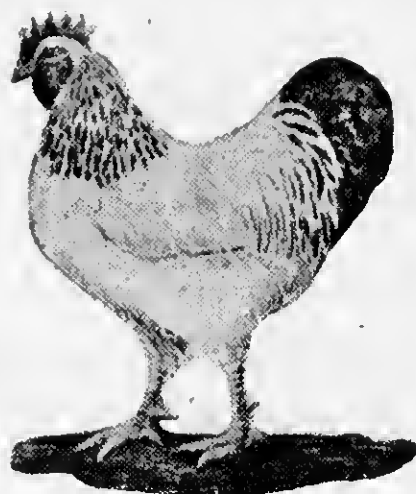

If the chicks pant for breath in the incubator it is not that the temperature is too high, but that the air is impure.

The smaller the poultry house the more need there is of keeping it clean.

The flock must have a clean place to roost in and a large place to scratch, or success in the business is a great uncertainty.

PAYS TO CAPONIZE THE SURPLUS MALES

On the average farm all cockerels that are not kept for breeding purposes can be caponized and disposed of in the fall and winter more efficiently than if they are sold in the spring as broilers or in the fall as roasting chickens, writes H. R. Lewis in the Country Gentleman. This is especially so since the birds will have ideal growing conditions with a small food cost. From

The Columbian Plymouth Rock originated from a cross of White Wyandotte and Light Brahma. It is a fine fowl both for beauty and utility. It has the fine markings of the Light Brahma and the size and conformation of the Rocks. It has a yellow, juicy, meaty carcass and lays a good quantity of big brown eggs. The illustration shows a Columbian cock.

In the same length of time it is possible to produce capons that will weigh a half more than they would have weighed as cockerels.

When it is eight months of age a cockerel of the American breeds will weigh from four to five pounds. The same bird, if caponized when about twelve weeks old, can easily be made to weigh from six to eight pounds, and the resulting flesh will be softer and possessed of finer texture and superior flavor.

The capon at eight months of age will command on the market from 22 to 30 cents, depending upon the season, while the cockerel will bring from 13 to 25 cents. These differences vary considerably throughout the year, the highest capon prices being realized during the holidays.

The cost of feeding a capon during the eight months' period will be much less than that of feeding a cockerel, because more of the food consumed is stored up on the body as flesh and less is devoted to energy. After the operation the disposition of the birds becomes modified; they become quieter and gentler, standing close confinement well and not attempting to fly over obstacles or to quarrel and fight among themselves.

Cockerels may be caponized at any age, but it is undesirable to perform the operation when the birds are too young or after they are more than six months old. In determining the proper time size should be the determining factor rather than age, the most desirable time being when the birds weigh from a pound to a pound and a half or after they have reached the age of at least two months.

DAIRY and CREAMERY

SCOURS IN CALVES.

Condensed Milk Recommended as a Cure For the Trouble.

Last summer we purchased a valuable registered Holstein cow, and when she reached Greenbank farm she had a helper calf about four days old by her side, writes a correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman. They had been on the journey two days, and the calf was scouring badly. We tried all the popular remedies for the complaint, but at the end of three days the calf was much worse, and we had about given up by her recovery when the idea came to me to try condensed milk. I procured a can at once and gave the calf eight ounces in two pounds of its hot water as it could stand, repeated the dose in six hours, and before another six hours had passed I saw a decided improvement in condition. I used condensed milk for three days, and the calf was cured.

and the next morning was surprised to find the bowels in nearly normal condition. After the second day we left out the condensed milk, gradually increasing fresh milk in the water until at the end of the third day the calf was again on its usual allowance of fresh milk three times a day.

Since our first experiment we have had occasion to try this treatment several times in our herd with the same marked success, and one of our dairy men to whom we have recommended the treatment reports the same results. I do not know how this treatment would work on "white scours" caused from navel infection, but to the ordinary form of the disorder it comes from the various forms of indigestion I believe it to be an almost infallible remedy.

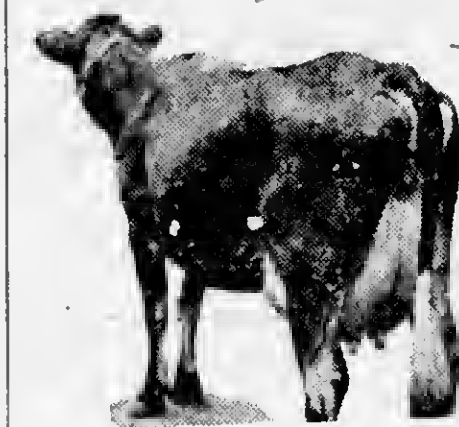

BAD FLAVORS IN CREAM.

Bitterness Frequently Caused by Improper Feeding.

Bitter cream usually occurs during the winter months, especially when the cream is exposed to low temperatures, writes G. L. McKay in Hoard's Dairyman. The bitterness is due to peptones or lactic acid. Possibly the reason that the bitterness does not show up as much in the summer months as in the winter is due to the fact that the lactic acid development in cream during the warm weather has the effect of checking or preserving it. I am inclined to think that feed conditions also have some effect on the bitterness in cream.

I have observed, for a great many years, the fact that in open winters, when the cows are turned out or permitted to eat frozen vegetation, the bitterness in cream is more prevalent than when the cows are kept in the stable and fed normal feeds, such as hay, straw, corn ensilage or similar feeds.

Ripening the cream at medium high temperatures, say 70 degrees F., and using a good starter and stirring the cream frequently during the ripening process, has a tendency to overcome or eliminate the bitterness in cream to a certain extent. In regard to metallic flavor, it is rather a difficult problem to describe what is really meant by a metallic flavor. It has been contended by some that a metallic flavor is due to cream being separated through unclean separators. In other words, it is a matter of dirt or undesirable fermentation. The development of acid seems to irritate or enhance the metallic flavor. I have heard creamerymen make the statement that in taking two churnings of butter from the same vat the first churning would be free from any metallic flavor, while the second would show a pronounced metallic flavor.

One large manufacturer of butter informed me that he has overcome the metallic flavor entirely by neutralizing the acidity in the cream down to a very low per cent by using lime water, then pasteurizing and using a starter and working the cream through quickly.

Buying a Dairy Bull. In buying the bull for the dairy herd, be sure that you get one that will balance up any possible defect in your cows. That is the only way to arrive at a successful uniformity of the entire herd. The hen that lays the most is the liveliest and, as a matter of course, is the healthiest. Handle one that is lazy and unproductive and then handle the good layer and note the difference in condition. One will be fat and soft; the other muscular and hard. Give us the business hen every time for profit. It is her eggs that will always be fertilized and her chicks stout and strong.

Hen Management Pays. That the proper care and management of a farm flock has a great deal to do with the success or failure of the business can be seen from a recent study of eighteen farm flocks of poultry in Ohio. The best flock of 100 hens produced $247 in one year, while the poorest flock only cleared $15. Such is the difference between efficiency and inefficiency.

Selecting Breeding Hens. Breed from your best layers if possible. If you cannot distinguish them then select the hens with red combs, good space (about three fingers' width) between the pelvic bones and about four fingers' width from pelvic bones to the rear end of the breast bone.

Wind and Storms. The wind always blows from a region of fair weather toward a region where a storm is forming.

REPUBLICAN BANQUET

Attendance the Largest in Its History—Many Good Speakers Present.

The tenth annual banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican Club, held at Boyne City last Friday evening, had the largest attendance and was the most successful in every way of any held by the club thus far. Arrangements had been made to seat 150 guests, this being the average number in past years, but before the evening was over, about two hundred were served.

All speakers scheduled on the program were present, consisting of Senator William Alden Smith, candidate for nomination for presidency; Senator Charles E. Townsend, Congressman Frank E. Scott, Hon. C. Diekema, gubernatorial candidate, and State Senator J. Lee Morford.

William J. Pearson acted as toastmaster, and was presented with the Cannon cigar, held in readiness for "Uncle Joe" in case he was able to attend.

Each speaker on the program was at his best and held their audience during the time allotted to them to speak. Charlevoix was well represented, over fifty making the trip on the City of Boyne.

MAPLE GROVE PICNIC

Usual Large Crowd Attend Annual Event Pulled Off by Hustling Grange.

There seemed to be no lack in attendance, over previous years at the annual grange picnic held at the Maple Grove grange hall held on Saturday last, with the exception that it is an off year for politicians, and the absence of the office seeker with the glad hand was quite noticeable.

The weather was all that could be asked for and the crowd enjoyed themselves to the utmost. The address given by Hon. H. F. Baker of Wendock was inspiring one. The speaker was very plain in his statements in regard to what the Grange is intended for. Organization, he said, means the life and protection of practically everything, and in connection with this advised the members of the grange to stand shoulder to shoulder for their own good.

The dance in the evening was well attended, there being hardly room enough in the hall to accommodate those who desired admittance.

Grange Column

Marion Center Grange.

Marion Center grange No. 956 met last Friday evening in regular form with about 30 members present and a few visitors.

Mrs. Frankie Himebauch took charge of the program which consisted of songs, instrumentals recitations, etc. After the program a miscellaneous shower was given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Bert McGann, and supper was served in the basement. Meeting again in two weeks. Come to Marion Center grange for a good time.

Wilson Grange No. 719

The regular meeting of Wilson Grange was held Saturday evening, August 28. Worthy Master Frank Smith called the meeting to order and proceeded to business. The committee on lights reported they had purchased a new gasoline lighting outfit.

The program consisted of music, songs, readings and recitations.

The ladies' auxiliary decided to omit the next meeting on account of the fair. After grange a lunch, consisting of watermelon, wafers and peanuts, was served by the brothers on the committee.

There were twenty-four members present and four visitors from South Arm Grange.

Ironton Grange.

Ironton grange held its regular meeting Aug. 24, with Master Grant Hammond in the chair. After the regular business order, the lecturer's hour was taken up with music on the phonograph by Brother Emil Nasson.

Reading, Ole Lyngklip. Story, Brother Carleson. Reading, Jerry Saunders. German Song by Sister Nasson. Reading, Sister Cora Hammond.

As Sister Cora Hammond, our worthy lecturer, will be absent next meeting, Sister Clara Nowland will take the office, and a fine program is being prepared. After the grange closed, Emil Nasson played some fine pieces on the phonograph and the young people danced.

FEW CHANGES IN TEACHING FORCE

Charlevoix Schools to Open on Monday, September 13th.

School Year Will Commence With Strongest Teaching Force in Its History.

The school activities should represent the great world of affairs. The schools main function is to develop the boy so he may properly function in the practical activities of life. No other goal is worthy of the most democratic of institutions in America, the public schools. It is with this end in view that people have lavishly spent, and continue to spend in greater degree, enormous amounts upon the education of the youth. Because the people wish the school to function in practical life, the school in the past few years has labored under criticism, sometimes just and often unjust, but always the aim was the same, to make the school and the community a co-operating organization, working together for the progress of the greatest asset the United States possesses, the American Youth.

The community and the school now are largely in co-operation. The consideration of both the people and the teachers is to turn out a good product. The school is in reality a great factory, with millions spent in buildings, grounds and equipment, and millions more in maintenance, both incidentally and professionally. This factory should stand the test of all business corporations. The product must be a good article, and suited to the world's need. The people have a right to demand that the students be prepared for vocational life, for civic life in a democracy, for strong vigorous physical life, and that these be all backed with strong moral fiber, which makes man the great animal of oimals. This end can only be accomplished by applying modern business methods to the school corporations of our country. We need good equipment, good and capable workers, and on aim in view. The school of the present must be a business corporation, run on a corporation basis, and the product shall be the test of its efficiency.

September 13th, Charlevoix's greatest corporation opens. The boys and girls will be called from the active duties of life to make more and better preparation for their future. To develop quality of mind, body and soul, that the world may say after their part in the great drama of life has been played, there was a man.

The people have been generous with their money in the past, and this summer many changes have been made. The heating system has been completely overhauled, and the old and unsanitary conditions have been removed and the buildings put in the best possible condition that their construction will permit. The buildings are in a sanitary condition, that should do much for the pupils' health. The grounds have been greatly improved and adds much to the appearance of the school plant.

Only four changes in the faculty for this year, and these additions will add strength to an already strong teaching force. The following is the list of instructors.

The Charlevoix schools have always had an excellent reputation and the desire is to hold onto the present and reach into the future for the best in education for the Charlevoix youth.

CHANGE ROSE STREET

Step Being Taken to Make Street Continuation of Park Avenue.

Why shouldn't Rose Street be a continuation of Park Avenue, is a question being debated by the common council and many Charlevoix residents. The question is being agitated with the plan in view of eliminating the name of Rose street from the city records, and re-naming it Park Avenue, thus making Park Avenue a continuous street from Bridge street to the end of what is now called Rose street.

If there is any street in the city that should be named "Park," it is the one running parallel with the city park. Few people in the city know where Rose street was located at any stage of the game, and the suggestion is a good one. By all means make the entire street come under one name—and that Park Avenue. Within the next week the change will probably be made.

FIFTY PERSONS ARE HOMELESS

Lumbering Town of Cecil Bay Almost Destroyed by Fire Wednesday.

Nine Houses and Other Buildings Burned as Well as Large Quantity of Mill Products.

Nine families were made homeless and, counting the children, these total fifty persons, when a fierce fire burned nine houses, the blacksmith shop and large piles of shingles and staves, at the lumbering village of Cecil Bay north of Cross Village, last Wednesday afternoon and evening.

The fire was probably caused by several little children, who, left at home for a half hour by their mother, Mrs. Sydney White, played in the fire and lighted matches. Mrs. White says she had been away from home but a short time before the fire started and that when she tried to enter the rear of her home the flames drove her back. There were few men at the village when the fire first broke out as most of them were three miles back in the woods at work and some were out along the wagon road fighting fierce forest fires. The women and children soon became frantic and little or nothing was saved from the burned dwellings.

There was no fire-protection except the bucket brigade which was hastily formed. Water was carried from the river and lake to save the mill, which was in the direct path of the flames. The wind was quite strong and fire-brands were carried for a quarter of a mile over onto the piles of shingles and other manufactured wooden material. One house after another caught fire quickly and nothing could be done to save them, the entire row on the west side of the street going up in smoke quickly.

The fifty persons are left completely destitute with only the clothing they wore at the time of the fire.

The loss will run into the thousands and the homeless are being taken care of by local contributions.

Better Wake Up Mr. Merchant

During the last ten days the local postoffice has received 35 sacks of mail containing something over three hundred catalogues from Chicago mail order houses. Thirty went out on rural route alone.

Are you going to compete successfully with these foreign retail houses by hanging back and discounting the value of advertising? The time is ripe for putting a stop to trading with Chicago mail order concerns by wise and persistent advertising. By this means alone they have reached their enormous proportions. Charlevoix merchants, are you alive to the situation? These acts should give you food for thought.

PREDICTED THAT RACE FOR GOVERNOR WILL BE A LIVELY ONE

Many Starters Now in the Field and Today Its Anybody's Fight—Dickema of Holland Looked on as the Strong Candidate—Ferris Choice of Democrats.

Wherever Republican politicians gather, particularly up state, the fight for governor next year is a pertinent topic of conversation, and there are usually as many views of the situation as there are politicians in the party, says the Detroit Saturday Night in a recent issue.

On only one point is there any agreement. That is if another free-for-all like last year is indulged in by the party, Lieutenant-Governor Dickinson backed by the dry element which cares nothing for the party or political principles outside of its own propaganda, will walk off with the nomination.

It has been rumored from time to time that Chase S. Osborn will get into the fight again with prohibition as his principal war-cry and it has been put up to the present lieutenant-governor that he should step aside for Osborn and join with the Soo man and run for re-election to his present office, but it can be stated as coming direct from the Charlotte statesman that he will not yield to Osborn. Within a very short time he has announced emphatically that he will run for the Republican nomination no matter what Mr. Osborn does and that he expects the solid support of the dries. In fact Mr. Dickinson makes it plain that he doesn't think much of Osborn's proposition to come in now when prohibition is a vital issue and attempt to ride back into office on the dry wave when the honor, if honor is to accrue, belongs to the men who have been fighting in the dry ranks.

Of course, no one concedes Mr. Dickinson a chance to win the nomination unless the opposition is split about four or five ways. The wise ones figures that there are some 50,000 voters in the state who look on the dry and wet question as the dominant issue. This doesn't mean that there are only 50,000 people who are against liquor but that others who would vote for prohibition don't believe that men should be chosen for office on this issue alone.

It is conceded that if Dickinson will remain at home and not be too much personally in the public eye he will secure the bulk of this 50,000 vote.

As to the other candidates, the woods are full of tentative aspirants, but there is only one avowed and working seeker after the nomination. He is Gerrit J. Diekema of Holland, former congressman and former Republican state chairman. Mr. Diekema is an excellent campaigner, has a wide state acquaintance, and has been working steadily since the first of the year. He has made numerous speeches in the state and has received a great deal of encouragement. Word comes down from the north that his candidacy has been well received in the upper peninsula, particularly among the mining leaders. He is generally pretty strong with the business interests, although there is no great crystallizing of sentiment in his behalf apparent.

A. C. Carton, present secretary of the public domain commission, is regarded as a likely starter, although there is considerable mystery about his status. He has let it be known that if he was assured of strong support he would run, but at the same time John J. Carton of Flint, brother of "Gus" and president of the last constitutional convention, has been telling his friends that he, and not "Gus" is to be a candidate.

The fly in the ointment of all of the candidates is the position of Alex J. Croesbeck of Detroit. It is conceded by everyone in touch with the situation that Mr. Croesbeck is an odds-on favorite in the metropolis and that if he contests again he will sweep Wayne by an even greater plurality than he did last year, when he carried it by 15,000. Mr. Croesbeck has kept his plans to himself. From the activity of his close friends it has been taken for granted that he will run but he has not publicly committed himself.

In the contest of 1914 Mr. Croesbeck carried his home county handsomely and ran Mr. Osborn an exceedingly close race in the upper peninsula, but in no other section of the state did he display any strength, except in Macomb and Sanilac counties. This was due, so his supporters assert, to the impossibility of convincing the rural county voters that Mr. Croesbeck would defeat Frederick C. Martindale in Wayne. The Martindale backers declared that the secretary of state would win the big county of the state and, logic being with them because of his long public career, while Mr. Croesbeck's name was appearing on a ballot for the first time, they convinced a large part of the element in the Republican party who were anxious to beat Chase S. Osborn and who went to Martindale for that reason. It has been conceded by about everyone in touch with Michigan politics that if there had been any idea up state of the strength of Mr. Croesbeck at home he would have been nominated.

But Mr. Martindale enters into the situation again. While no one figures where he has a chance to win, he has openly asserted that he will run again if Mr. Croesbeck contests, just so there will be two candidates from Wayne, although Mr. Croesbeck beat him two to one in the primary last year.

It is certain that before next spring an effort will be made to get the various candidates together in an endeavor to do away with the scramble in the primary, such as last year; but it is extremely doubtful that it will result in much because of feeling in the various camps.

So far as the Democrats are concerned, Republicans generally believe that Governor Ferris will be a candidate for a third term. The governor gives no direct inkling to his intentions and there are many Democrats who want E. C. Shields, present state chairman, to run, but there is a strong feeling that Governor Ferris will be a candidate.

NO MORE CUT RATE INSURANCE

Agents Now Bound By Same Laws and Rules.

Standard Rate is Now 70 Cents Per Hundred on a Three Year Policy.

The legislature of Michigan has recently enacted a law which took effect August 24, to provide supervision of rate making bureaus and prohibit discrimination in fire insurance rates.

For your information we give some of the salient features:

Section 1. Every fire insurance company shall maintain or be a member of a rating bureau.

Section 5. No fire insurance company or rating bureau shall fix or charge any rate which discriminates unfairly between risks of essentially the same hazards and the same degree of fire protection.

Section 11. The state banking commissioner, attorney-general and insurance commissioner shall constitute the board to receive written complaints of discrimination, and shall have power to order unfair discrimination removed. No such discriminations shall be removed by increasing the rate unless it shall be shown that the increase is justifiable.

Section 16. Violations of the provisions of the law by any company, agent or rating bureau shall suspend their authority to transact business in the state until it shall have paid the state a penalty of one hundred ($100.00) dollars for each violation.

FIRE BUG AT WORK

Repeated Attempts Made Recently to Burn Village of Fife Lake.

During the past two weeks a half dozen mysterious fires have been discovered in the village of Fife Lake and the residents are beginning to believe someone is deliberately attempting to burn down the town.

Three fires were discovered on Sunday, August 29, and one the following day, all of which undoubtedly were set. Only a short time ago a large potato warehouse was burned to the ground and several days later a fire was also discovered in a business place.

The last fire was discovered in the roof of the high school building, but it was extinguished before any damage was done. On the preceding night two other fires were the work of fire bugs. A blaze was seen in the store belonging to Dent Blue by a passerby. Aid was secured and the fire extinguished with but slight loss. An investigation showed that debris had been piled in several places in the store and lighted. Another fire started in the same manner burned out before getting a good start. Extra watchmen have been placed on duty and an effort made to catch the culprit.

PLEASED WITH SUNNY SOUTH

Former Charlevoix Resident Tells About His New Home.

Lynn Haven Only a New Town But Is Rapidly Increasing in Population.

There may be a number of the Courier readers who may be interested in a few words from the sunny south. The writer left "Charlevoix the Beautiful" in March, 1913, for the magic city of Lynn Haven, Florida, located on the beautiful St. Andrews Bay, with scores of miles of land locked waters, the safest I have ever seen for tourists to go boating and fishing.

The city of Lynn Haven first started in the year 1911 and now we have a population of about 3000, mostly people from northern states who gather here to inhale the soft recruiting climate.

The climate is excellent. The doctors here seem to have lots of time to go boat riding and fishing without being disturbed in the least. We are where the blossoms fairly cease to bloom—never so cold that it is unbearable and never so warm but that one can have a restful sleep nights. We have one of the finest locations here for one of the thriftest cities in the south. We are at present meeting with some reverses on account of the war in Europe, which prohibits the exportation of lumber and cotton, which are the two principle money-making industries in south-western Florida.

The next industry is fishing. Various kinds of salt water fish are caught out of the gulf of Mexico in large quantities with hooks and lines. Schooners from 15 to 50 ton burden fitted with gasoline engines and sail, called fishing smacks. They stock themselves with ice and provisions and make fishing trips from two to four weeks duration and sometimes come back loaded with the finny tribe. The land here is level, low, and the soil is a sandy loam and uncultivated. Florida natives line mostly on what they can get out of oysters and fish and also what they can pick up along the shore and have not made much use of the land.

Some of our southern people are cultivating gardens with good results, while others are not doing so well. The gardeners here will meet with increased results as soon as they become educated as to how to cultivate the southern soil. A Courier Reader.

lines. Often the young girl makes all her sport blouses over the "middy" pattern. Both long and three-quarter sleeves are permissible, and the neck is slightly V. The collars may be attached or adjustable, as preferred.

Three blouses may be of mull, batiste, dotted swiss or, far best of all, over lace in a girlish design of dot or small flower of point d'esprit.

A fine serge is the nicest thing for a middy suit. One of the cotton gowns may be a middy in white kindergarten cloth, to which there may be several sets of collars and cuffs—one dull blue, another rose, a third white with red or blue handings or mercerized braid. Another cotton gown may be pink chambray made without other trimming than tucks. This is good either on jumper blues to be worn with white gumpie or with a single breasted house opening up the front, slightly V neck and worn with white all over embroidery or embroidered linen cuffs and collars.

For the afternoon dresses lawn, dimity, dotted swiss, cotton voile, line—though it wrinkles badly—mull and batiste are all good. For the silk foulard or India silk give girlish results. Be sure they are spot proof; better yet, that they wash. The salt may be of serge, covert cloth or poplin. Soft tones are popular, but a warm navy blue is the best choice for a girl who must wear her suit two years. If there is a good suit from last year—provided the skirt is not too narrow—the new suit may be of white serge for best wear. This dyes well when it has been cleaned several times.

For the sport coat choose a light-weight tweed or one of the summer weight chinchillas or wool mixtures. These are more sensible than the blue or fancy mercerized silk and cotton mixtures that are stylish, but do not give enough protection after tennis and other heating sports.

For the dancing dresses, which may include a graduation gown, mulls, embroidered batiste, nets—dotted, plain or the new craquelé patterns—or flowered organdies are dainty, girlish and inexpensive. They are far aler for summer wear than crepe de chine, chiffon or silks.

How to Make Attractive and Serviceable Bed Comforts.

Any of the new dowered silk or all-cotton goods make handsome bed comforts with very little trouble and at small cost. They may be filled with cotton wadding, or old blankets may be used for the filling in place of the wadding. They should be about two yards square.

A dainty pink and green dower spray on a white ground is pretty, found around the edge with plain silkline. Pink egyptian turkish holds the material together in the corner, while the edges are stitched by machine.

When comforts are made of silk the border should be placed at the extreme edge of the comfort, because silk does not come as wide as silkline. Japanese silk is especially attractive for the purpose. Silk mullins, both plain and fancy, are much used for bed comforts.

How to Make Brazil Nut Salad.

Shred crisp and well washed celery and cut up rather fine, or in only four or five pieces, each kernel of an equal quantity of Brazil nuts. Mix these together and dress with mayonnaise dressing. They dice of bread and butter are sometimes added to this salad and a cream dressing added. Salt rising bread cut first in thin slices, heavily buttered and used in this combination, adds food value and novelty. It is an English vegetable's idea.

How to Remove Rust Stains.

Rust stains can be easily removed by putting vinegar and salt on the stain and placing it in the warm sun. Repeat this until the stain is removed. The vinegar and salt together are very active and will remove the stain more quickly than lemon and salt.

TABLE LINENS.

How to Keep Up With the Styles in Household Linens.

No matter how great a pride the matron takes in her rugs and pictures, her eggshell china and cut glass or the shimmering glory of her silver, if she is a real housewife the corner of the home that lies closest to her heart is her linen closet. Here, amid the faint fragrance of dried rose leaves or lavender, are stored the fine tablecloths, the napkins, the extra towels and hem-stitched sheets and, in fact, all the linens which her fingers have worked upon—clean and fresh and fragrant, a monument to her good housekeeping.

PEG O' MY HEART

By J. Hartley Manners

A Comedy of Youth Founded by Mr. Manners on His Great Play of the Same Title—Illustrations From Photographs of the Play

Copyright, 1913, by Dodd, Mead & Company

SYNOPSIS.

Frank O'Connell, young Irish patriot, is shot and wounded by British soldiers while making a home rule speech. He is aided by Angela Kingsnorth, an English society girl, who defends him. Angela takes O'Connell to her brother's home and helps to nurse him. He recovers, and he and the girl become fast friends. O'Connell when well is sent to jail for disturbing the peace. He finally writes Angela that he has finished his sentence. O'Connell and Angela wed. She now espoused the Irish cause. Her brother, a member of parliament, is very angry. The happy couple come to America to live. A daughter is born to them. Angela's brother refuses to help the couple in any way. Angela dies. O'Connell names his daughter Margaret and calls her "Peg." O'Connell receives a most important letter from England, which perplexes him. O'Connell allows Peg to visit England at her uncle's request. The elder Kingsnorth's heart had finally softened toward his dead sister's little girl. Peg goes to the home of the Chichester family in England at the direction of Mr. Hawkes, Kingsnorth's attorney, as Kingsnorth suddenly dies. She first meets Ethel Chichester and Brent, a married man in love with Ethel. She interrupts them by accident in a secret meeting. Ethel is enraged at Peg and haughtily dismisses her from the drawing room, sending her to the servants' quarters. The Chichesters have lost their money in a bank failure. Hawkes arrives and reads the Kingsnorth will. It leaves most of the fortune to Peg and offers liberal pay to any one who will undertake her education and social training. Mrs. Chichester finally agrees to bring up Peg in return for the money promised, although she openly despises the shabby young girl. Peg is heartbroken at the cold reception given her by the Chichester family. She is much impressed, however, by the luxury of her surroundings. Peg meets Jerry Adair, who takes a lively interest in her. She finds in him a real friend. She tells him about her father. He is a farmer, he says. Peg decides to return home, but on Jerry's plea she decides to remain in England a month. Brent and Ethel have another meeting. Both are unhappy.

CHAPTER XX.
A Real Friend.
DOOR slammed loudly in the distance as Peg talked to Jerry. Peg distinctly heard her aunt's voice and Alaric's. In a moment she became quite stricken. She made one bound for the top stairs and sprang up them three at a time. At the top she turned and warned him: "Don't tell any one you saw me."

"I won't," promised the astonished young man. But their secret was to be short lived. As Peg turned Ethel appeared at the top of the stairs, and as she descended, glaring at Peg, the unfortunate girl went down backward before her. At the same moment Mrs. Chichester and Alaric came in through the door. They all greeted Jerry warmly. Mrs. Chichester was particularly gracious.

"So sorry we were out. You will stay to lunch?" "It is what I came for," replied Jerry heartily. He slipped his arm through Alaric's and led him up to the windows. "Why, Al, your cousin is adorable!" he said enthusiastically. "What?" Alaric gasped, in horror. "You've met her?" "Indeed I have. And we had the most delightful time together. I want to see a great deal of her while she's here."

"You're joking?" remarked Alaric cautiously. "Not at all. She has the frank, honest grip on life that I like better than anything in mankind or womankind. She has made me a convert to home rule already."

The innkeeper gong sounded in the distance. Alaric hurried to the door. "Come along, every one! Lunch!" "Thank goodness!" cried Jerry, joining him. "I'm starving."

Peg came quietly from behind the newest post, where she had been practically hidden, and went straight to Jerry and, smiling up at him, her eyes dancing with amusement, said: "So am I starvin' too. I've not had a bite since 4."

"Allow me," and Jerry offered her his arm. Mrs. Chichester quickly interposed. "My niece is tired after her journey. She will lunch in her room."

"Oh, but I'm not a bit tired," ejaculated Peg anxiously. "I'm not tired at all, and I'd much rather have lunch down here with Mr. Jerry."

The whole family were agitated. Ethel looked indignantly at Peg. Mrs. Chichester ejaculated, "What?" Alaric, almost struck dumb, fell back upon "Well, I mean to say!"

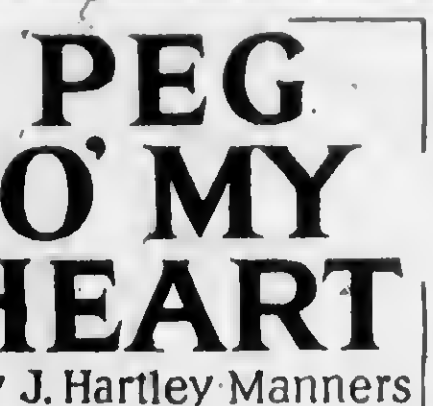

"And you shall go in with Mr. Jerry," said that young gentleman, slipping Peg's arm through his own. Turning to Mrs. Chichester, he asked her: "With your permission we will lead the way. Come, Peg," and he led her to the door and opened it.

Peg looked up at him, a roguish light dancing in her big, expressive eyes. "Thanks. I'm not so sure about that wagger of yours. I think your life is safe. I want to tell you you've saved mine." She put one hand gently on her little stomach and cried, "I am so hungry my soul is hangin' by a thread."

Laughing gayly the two new found friends went in search of the dining room. "Disgraceful!" ventured Ethel. "Awful!" said the stunned Alaric. "She must be taken in hand at once!" came in firm tones from Mrs. Chichester. "She must never be left alone again. Come quickly before she can disgrace us any further today."

The days that followed were never to be forgotten ones for Peg. Her nature was in continual revolt. The teaching of her whole lifetime she was told to correct. Everything she said, everything she looked, everything she did was wrong.

Tutors were engaged to prepare her for the position she might one day enjoy through her dead uncle's will. They did not remain long. She showed either marked incapacity to acquire the slightest veneer of culture—else it was pure willfulness. The only gleams of relief she had were on the occasions when Jerry visited the family. Whenever they could avoid Mrs. Chichester's watchful eyes they would chat and laugh and play like children.

A Door Slammed Loudly in the Distance as Peg Talked to Jerry.

was it, eh? Something forbidden?" and he leered knowingly at her. Then he made a quick snatch at the book, saying, "Show it me!"

Peg ran across the room and, turning up a corner of the carpet, put the book under it, turned back the carpet, put her foot determinedly on it and turned again to face her tormentor.

Brent went rapidly across to her. The instinct of the chase was quick in his blood. "A hiding place, eh? Now you make me really curious. Let me see." He again made a movement toward the hidden book.

Peg clutched both of her hands into little fists and glared at Brent, while her breath came in quick, sharp gasps. "I love spirit!" cried Brent.

Then he looked at her charming dress, at her stylish coiffure, at the simple spray of flowers at her breast. He gave an ejaculation of pleasure.

"What a wonderful change in a month! You most certainly would not be sent to the kitchen now. Do you know you have grown into a most attractive young lady? You are really delightful angry. And you are angry, aren't you? And with me, eh? I'm so sorry if I've offended you. Let us kiss and be friends."

He tried to take her in his arms. Peg gave him a resounding box on the ear. The door opened, and Ethel came into the room. Peg hurried out through the windows.

Brent turned to Ethel. "My dear!" Ethel looked coldly at him. "Why did she run away?" Brent smiled easily and confidently: "I'd surprised one of her secrets, and she flew into a temper."

"Secrets?" was all Ethel said. "Yes, see." He walked across to the corner and turned back the carpet and, kneeling down, searched for the book, found it and held it up triumphantly. "Here!" He stood up and opened the book and read the title page: "Love Stories of the World."

"To Peg from Jerry." Oh! cried Mr. Brent. "Jerry! Eh? No wonder she didn't want me to see it! Jerry! So that's how the land lies! Romantic little child!"

Ethel looked steadily at him. "Why don't you go after her?" and she nodded in the direction Peg had gone.

"Ethel!" he cried, agitated. "She is new and has all the virtues." "I assure you"—he began. "Really—Ethel!"

"Were you 'carried away' again?" she sneered. "Surely you're not jealous—of a—child?"

"No. I don't think it's jealousy," said Ethel slowly. "Then what is it?" "Disgust!" She shrugged her shoulders contemptuously. "Now I understand why the scullery is sometimes the rival of the drawing room. The love of change!"

He turned away from her. Ethel watched him quietly. "Chris, come here!" He turned to her. "There! It's all over! I suppose I have been a little hard on you." She held out her hand.

"My nerves have been rather severely tried this past month," Ethel went on. "Put a mongrel into a kennel of thoroughbreds and they will either destroy the intruder or be in a continual condition of unsettled, irritated intolerance. That is exactly my condition."

Brent sat beside her and said softly: "Then I've come in time?" Ethel smiled. "So did I, didn't I?" and she indicated the window through which Peg ran after assaulting Brent.

"Don't! Please don't!" he pleaded. "Very well," replied Ethel complacently. "I won't."

"I'm sorry, Chris," remarked Ethel finally, after some moments had passed. "A month ago it wouldn't have mattered so much. Just now—it does. It's been horrible here."

"A month of misery for me, too," replied Brent passionately. "I'm going away—out of it. Tomorrow!" he added. "To Petersburg—Moscow—Siberia!"

"Oh, the cold places!" She paused, then asked: "Going alone?" He whispered almost into her ear: "Unless some one goes with me. Will you—go?" And he waited breathlessly.

She thought a moment, looked at him again and said quietly, "Chris, I wish I'd been here when you called—instead of that—brent."

CHAPTER XXI.
Complications.
BRENT turned away up again to the window seat crying, "Oh, this is unbearable!"

Ethel said quite calmly: "Is it? Your wife all over again, eh?" He came back to her. "No. I place you far above her, far above all petty suspicious of carping narrowness. I value you as a woman of understanding."

"I am," she said frankly. "From what you've told me of your wife she must be too."

"Don't treat me like this!" he pleaded distractedly. "What shall I do," asked Ethel with wide open eyes, "apologize? That's odd. I've been waiting for you to."

As Brent moved up toward the windows Alaric came in behind him through the door. "Hello, Brent," he called out heartily. "Here ye?"

"Very well, thank you, Alaric," he said, controlling his surprise. "Good. The dear wife well too?" "Very."

"And the sweet child?" "Yes."

"You must bring 'em along some time. The major would love to see them. And so would Ethel, Ethel" loves babies, don't you, dear?" Without waiting for Ethel to reply he hurried on. "And, talking of babies, have you seen Margaret anywhere?"

Ethel nodded in the direction of the garden. "Out there?" "Splendid. The major wants her. We've got to have a family meeting about her and at once." Alaric hurried out through the windows into the garden.

Brent hurried over to Ethel. "I'm at the hotel. I'll be there until morning. Send me a message, will you? I'll wait up all night for one." He paused. "Will you?"

"Perhaps," replied Ethel. "I'm sorry if anything I've said or done has hurt you."

She checked him just as her mother appeared at the top of the stairs. At the same moment Bennett, the maid, came in through the door.

Mrs. Chichester greeted Brent contemptuously: "How do you do, Mr. Brent? You will excuse me?" She turned to the maid. "When did you see my niece last?" "Not this hour, madam."

"Tell Jarvis to search the gardens, the stables, to look up and down the road."

"Goodby, Mrs. Chichester—and—Ethel," said Brent. He looked meaningfully and significantly at Ethel as he

DEMOCRATIC newspapers and democratic politicians are ringing the changes on the "stand-by-the-president" slogan. In a thousand tones we—and by "we" is meant the republican party—are told how heavy is the president's burden, how Mexico vexes him, how the European war bothers him, how he is preserving us in peace, how he is bringing us "prosperity," how he will manage the national defence, how he will augment our revenues; and how it is our duty, not as republicans but as patriots, to stand by him and to support his policies.

What are those policies? What is planned for Mexico? What will be done further about the Lusitania case? What course is to be pursued regarding the English interference with our commerce? What recommendations have been made for national defence? How is the feeble treasury to be bolstered up? Nobody can tell. But we are asked to support policies which the president will develop without consultation with anyone representing our party—policies based upon counsels taken from unofficial and prejudiced sources and formulated by the president alone.
In due season we shall be notified. Meantime it is our duty to "stand by the president" and to continue to do so, ad infinitum, ad nauseam.

In some degree there has been a willingness to do this. But that tendency has now been checked, and by the president himself. While jealously cloaking every detail of his policy for neutrality, for Mexico, for defence, for revenue, he has made it plain that one thing he is going to insist upon at the next session of congress, and that is the passage of the ship-purchase bill.

This measure has been featured in no party platform, has been condemned by the business interests of the country, is purely socialistic in its purpose, is fraught with infinite danger to our standing as a neutral nation, is repugnant to all republicans and to many democrats—yet the president insists upon it. Nothing could better reveal his real nature or better exemplify the insulting character of the hypocritical appeal to "stand by the president." Republicans are asked to surrender their right of judgment regarding fiscal and foreign policies in favor of some unknown theories which have not yet taken shape even upon the executive typewriter—while the president is unwilling to budge anything from his obstreperous hacking of an obnoxious measure. This one-sided and juggled proposition is likely to defeat itself. The republicans are asked to concede everything. The president is willing to concede nothing. Patriotism is one thing and partisanship is another. But, in pushing the ship-purchase bill as he does, the president is neither patriotic nor partisan. He is petty personal and proud. The scheme is not the people's scheme nor any party's scheme.
It is the president's own scheme. To persist in it, while beseeching republican support for other measures, means that the president looks upon the republican party as weak either in purpose or in intellect. Is it not time to demonstrate that we are neither?

If Woodrow Wilson expects republicans to "stand by" him, it is about time that he displayed some of that courteous spirit of concession which may rightfully be expected when opponents co-operate for a high purpose.

ACCORDING to the weather man the country is liable to see some good old summer weather during the coming weeks. While there is no objection to having good weather it will prove of little use to those whose crops have been annihilated by the frosts. However, our past experience has taught us to place little credence to reports sent out at any stage of the game.

MR. Pence—at any price Bryan will please take notice that Germany has agreed unconditionally to the demands of President Wilson regarding the human submarine warfare that Germany was conducting; and also that the United States will not have to go to war.

THE Thaw's aren't going to keep out of the lime light very long. Harry has begun action for divorce from Evelyn, alleging adultery. How horrible that Harry should ever suspect the charming Evelyn of such conduct.

don the peek-a-boos for the winter.

It isn't safe to tell all you know. The small daughter of the hostess looked long and inquiringly at the guest who she had been told was a very learned man and a professor. During a lull in the conversation she spoke up, "What do you do in college, please, sir?" "I am a professor, my dear," was the reply. "I impart my knowledge to the students." "Then if you keep on that way," she said soberly, "pretty soon you won't know anything yourself, will you?"

There were some deficiencies in the early education of Mrs. Donahue but she never mentioned them or admitted their existence. "Will you sign your name here?" asked the young lawyer, whom Mrs. Donahue had asked to draw up a deed transferring a piece of land to her daughter. "You sign it yourself an' I'll make me mark," said the old woman quickly. "Since me eyes gave out, I'm not able to write a wurd, young man." "How do you spell it?" he asked, as he poised the pen above the proper place. "Spell it whatever way you please," said Mrs. Donahue recklessly. Since I've lost me teeth there's not a wurd in the wurd I can spell."

An old lady travelling for the first time in a large city, saw a glaring sign on the front of a building which read,
"The Smith Manufacturing Co." As she repeated it aloud slowly, she remarked to her nephew: "Lawdy mercy.
Well I've hearn tell of Smiths all my life, but I never knew before where they made 'em."

A small girl went to a drugstore on an errand. "Mother wants a dime's worth of glory divine," "We don't keep that," said the druggist. "Oh, yes, you do," the little maid retorted.
"We've got it here before. Mother puts it down the sink and the drain in the back yard." Then the druggist knew that the 'glory divine' was another way of saying chloride of lime.

A young resorter was exhibiting his pictures to a charming girl. "This one," he said, handing her a picture,
"is my photo taken with two French poodles. Can you recognize me?"
"Why, certainly," she replied, looking at it intently. "You are the one with the hat on."

Easily Made Steam Trap.
An inexpensive steam trap can be constructed from a piece of eight inch pipe six or eight inches long, two flanged heads and a float, says Popular Mechanics. The pipe is threaded for the flanges, which are to hold the heads after they are prepared. One side of the pipe is drilled near one end to receive a pipe from the lowest part of the steam system. The other side is fitted with a ball float and lever hinged near its center. The float lever is fitted

CONSTRUCTION OF STEAM TRAP with an arm slanted properly to carry a tapered valve on that end which ensures the outlet pipe.

The action of the trap is as follows:
The water from the condensation in the steam system falls to the lowest part and enters the trap. When the level has risen sufficiently to lift the ball float the valve is opened and the steam pressure forces the water out.
The lowering of the water in the trap allows the ball float to close the opening.

Clock Repairing.
When the ordinary clock has served its usefulness and is apparently worn out, the Jeweler's price to overhaul it frequently amounts to almost as much as the original purchase price, says Popular Mechanics. One work place in the clock is the escapement wheel.
The points soon wear down, thereby producing a greater escapement and pendulum movement, resulting in an increased strain and wear of the clock.
If the tips of the teeth on the wheel are bent up slightly with a pair of pliers, the swing of the pendulum will be reduced, thereby increasing the life of the clock. Many of the grandfather's clocks can be put in order in this manner so as to serve as a timepiece as well as a cherished ornament.

GARDENING NOTES.

Plant at least a few onion sets in the open ground just as soon as the soil can be prepared. Early planting is favorable to early maturity and high yields.

It is possible to grow strong rhubarb roots for forcing purposes in one year. The two essentials are early planting under glass and very rich soil when they are planted out of doors.

With or French endive is easily forced in the cellar near the furnace. Sow seed in the open ground to produce roots for forcing next winter.

Why not grow some strong asparagus roots this summer for your own use and a surplus to sell to your neighbors?

The early, smooth peas may be planted just as soon as the frost is out of the ground. See that some rotten manure is worked into the furrows.

BARRENESS IN CORN.

Various Reasons Other Than Heredity
Given For Loss of Yield.

Many of our corn breeders treat barrenness in corn as hereditary. However, I have noticed that if corn is planted properly, not too thick, on well prepared fertile soil and given good cultivation there are as a rule very few barren stalks, says a correspondent of the American Agriculturist.

On the other hand if the corn is planted too thick and the grass and weeds allowed to grow with the corn there are more barren stalks in the same variety than in such corn if well cared for.

If the barrenness has any hereditary tendency at all in corn it may be largely overcome by good soil preparation, careful planting and good cultivation. I would rather risk going to the cornish to select my seed in the spring provided the corn was well dried before storing and was stored before hard freezing weather set in than to trust to seed from a distance and thus get seed from a variety of corn not known and tested in my locality.

As to barrenness Professor Hunt in his "Cereals in America" says: "A varying percentage of the stalks of the field are barren, do not bear any ears. The percentage of barren stalks on a given soil varies with the thickness of planting and the season. Barrenness does not seem to be a variety characteristic.
It seems to be largely the result of environment. If it were a hereditary characteristic the fact that the stalks are barren would tend to eliminate them."

Would it not be a good plan to observe along the line of barrenness next summer when the corn is coming rather than to take it for granted that barrenness is an hereditary characteristic that can be overcome or controlled only by years of painstaking breeding?

Sanitary Hens' Nests.

The hens' nests shown herewith are easily kept clean and sanitary, writes a correspondent of the Orange Judd Farmer. Foot wide boards are fastened to use in its construction, excepting the covering board, which should be four teen inches wide, or two boards that total fourteen inches.

The board h, that forms the bottom of the nest, is made so it can slide out and in, drawer fashion. It is supported by two cleats, c, c, one each nailed to the lower ends of the upright end boards. These end boards are made two and one-half inches longer than the partitions. Thus the lower ends of the partitions are just above

NESTS CAN BE EASILY CLEANED

the bottom board. When the bottom board is drawn out the nests are bottomless, making them free from house filth and dust. The upright end boards and partitions are sawed off at an angle, so the covering board when laid on will have sufficient slope to let a hen that attempts to roost on top slide off.

A board about five inches wide is nailed on in front to keep the nest material in the nests. In front of it by 2 inch lath is fastened on, perch-like, so as to be about five inches from the nests and two inches above the level of the sliding bottom. The use of the lath is that a hen may walk on it until she comes to a vacant nest.

Contagious Ophthalmia.

The disease is due to a specific germ, says Kimball's Dairy Farmer. Isolate the affected animals in a darkened stable and feed them light, laxative rations. Twice daily bathe the eyes with a 10 per cent solution of borax acid applied each time with a fresh swab of absorbent cotton. Every other day dust the eyeballs with a mixture of finely powdered salicylic acid and borax acid. Substitute iodoform for calomel in the worst cases. After inflammation subsides wet the eyeball once daily with a solution of two grains of nitrate of silver in one ounce of distilled water.
To be kept in a blue glass bottle to prevent chemical changes. The latter treatment is for opacity of the eyeball.
Keep the cattle off low, wet pastures.
Clean up, disinfect and whitewash the stables, fences and feeding racks and fountains.

Dripless Skylight Glass.

The problem of eliminating the drip that forms on skylights from the condensation of the moisture in the air has apparently been solved in a new type of glass that has just been placed on the market. In this glass the under surface is formed in webs or channels running with the pitch of the roof and so shaped as to give the greatest degree of capillary attraction. The result is that all condensation is held and is gradually conducted to a gutter at the lower edge of the glass sheet.
This glass is said to be effective in preventing drip on a pitch as low as 10 degrees.

Fires In Paint Barrels.

Many serious shop fires have had their origin in a paint barrel or tank used for dip painting. Such tanks or barrels occasionally take fire either spontaneously or through other causes, and when once in flame it is very difficult to extinguish it before damage is done. Water is useless, as it only spreads the burning paint; the ordinary fire extinguisher is of about the same class, and used, while used by some with fair success, so fills the paint with grit and dirt as to render the entire batch unfit for further use. To put out a fire of this kind the American Machinist points out that a mixture of bicarbonate of soda and fine sawdust is about the proportion of ten pounds of bicarbonate to each bushel of sawdust has been found effective. The mixture is thrown into the burning tank and the cover replaced. This fire is almost instantly choked out by the heavy blanket of carbonic acid gas formed by the burning sawdust and sodium carbonate. After the fire is out and the tank has cooled the charred sawdust dirt may be skimmed off the top, and the paint underneath will be found free from dirt and in a good condition as before the fire.

When Iron is Inflammable.

Iron burns freely under favorable conditions, though such a metal is not commonly thought of as combustible. A piece of soft iron when whittled into a flame burns brilliantly. A recently discovered process, termed by its inventor "colorization," said to protect combustible metals from atmospheric action at high temperatures and make them available for a much wider range of usefulness than is now the case, was recently described in the American Machinist. The metals are heated in revolving drums containing, among other things, finely divided aluminum, by which a surface alloy containing aluminum is produced. Pieces which because of their shape and size are not adapted for tumbling may be colorized by packing them in or painting them with a suitable mixture and heating them. After iron is colorized the effect of heating is slight. Instead of burning and the scale falling off, as in the case of untreated iron, practically no effect can be detected.

Electric Air Brake.

Electric pneumatic brakes are soon to displace the air brakes used on the passenger trains of the Pennsylvania railroad, says the Scientific American. This form of brake has been found necessary because of the weight of trains made up of all steel cars. In long trains the shock and surging accompanying the application of the brakes has proved very objectionable indeed. In a twelve car train it takes eight seconds for the full braking force to be felt at the last car. With the electric pneumatic brake the braking power will be exerted at the same instant on all the cars, and within two seconds after the application of the brakes the whole braking force will be exerted throughout the train.

Needle and Thread.

"I know the ins and outs of it," said the thread. "Yea," replied the needle, "sew do I."

Paint and paint brush should be as close friends of the housewife as are needle and thread. There is the baby buggy of wicker, stained and dirty from long use. A small can of stain and a couple of coats of black on the springs and wheels will make it with stand the still harder test of spring showers. The baby's iron crib looks as though it has a case of incipient measles where baby has dented off the enamel with the stock of its toy gun. Two coats, or, better, three, of white paint and enamel will cover the hilsters and make the crib as sanitary and pleasing as when new.

On close inspection the gas stove and its pipes appear rustily dingy and down in the mouth, as it were. Ah, just the thing! A small can of special stove paint in black will make the stove gleam happily again and remove its unkempt air. Perhaps, too, the radiators are spotted and shineless. It is only the work of a half hour to paint them with special silver or gold radiator paint, so that they will look well even though out of commission so soon.

The kitchen is an important field for the use of paint brush and paint. Frequently unsightly plumbing can, as suggested, be made attractive by the various lacquer paints. The pantry shelves need never be hard to clean if they are treated to one or two coats of white enamel. Table drawers also can be painted, which will prevent them from absorbing grease and getting so dirty. The legs and front of the ordinary kitchen table will look better and stay cleaner if given a coat of paint harmonizing with the other colors in the room. Wooden salt boxes, strips on which to hang utensils, the space between shelves in many closets, can all be made brighter and more sanitary by a liberal use of paint.

All woods with exposed pores absorb moisture and grease. Water enters the pores, causes them to swell and thus become discolored. The more impervious the wood surface can be made the easier it is to keep it clean and the longer the wood will last. Paint, varnish and stain, whose base should always be the best linseed oil, fill the pores of the wood, coating and rendering it impervious. And paint is not hard to clean. It is the open, untreated woodwork which looks dingy, absorbs grease and is hard to care for.

The Main Point.

"What's the best way to come to the front?" "Get good looking," said a more American.

HOW TO USE SOME DELIGHTFUL AND HEALTHFUL BEAUTY RECIPES

Here is a mixture for bath bags which is truly delightful: Four pounds of fine oatmeal, two quarts of cream, one and a half pounds of powdered orris root, one and a half pounds of almond meal, one pound of white castile soap, powdered and dried, and three ounces of primrose sachet.

Instead of placing in cheese-cloth bags, which is a wasteful way of using the delightful meal, sprinkle a little of the mixture on the moistened wash cloth.

Here is a bath for the enfeebled which was a favorite with the ancients: Mix one tablespoonful of lavender water with several times the amount of pure olive oil. Apply a little at a time and rub it well into the body with the entire hand, using a rotary motion. Keep the body warm while taking the treatment.

This is the Stove Polish YOU Should Use

IT'S different from others because more care is taken in the making and the materials used are of higher grade.

Black Silk Stove Polish

Makes a brilliant, silky polish that does not rub off or dust off, and the sheen lasts four times as long as ordinary stove polish. Used on sample stoves and sold by hardware and grocery dealers.

All we ask is a trial. Use it on your cook stove, your parlor stove or your gas range. If you don't find it the best stove polish you ever used, your dealer is authorized to refund your money. Write to Black Silk Stove Polish.

Made in liquid or paste—one quality.

"A Shine in Every Drop"

AROUND THE DAIRY.

The milking qualities of a cow are a result of inherited tendencies, but at the same time they can be materially stimulated with the right kind of care and feed.

One of the fortunate things about dairying is the truth that a cow that is a good milker usually produces a healthy calf.

The dairy farmer realizes that the comfortable cow is the most profitable cow, and that induces him to look after the comfort of all his stock.

It is best to keep the cows from developing objectionable traits. This will sometimes happen, but the right kind of handling is usually the best preventive.

The amount of milk a cow gives is important, but the trait of milking for a long period is still more important. This can frequently be developed by handling.

Esquimo Courtship.

If European death scenes astonish, the courtship "yes" of a bride at marriage shocks an Eskimo woman. Not only must a bride show herself uncom setting, she must, if she respects her self and tribal traditions, scream and struggle with all her might when her wooer or his envoy enters her family residence and, tying bold upon her, drags her, usually by the topknot, to her new home. She may be presented with a new lamp and water pail by her betrothed, and she is as a general thing a slightly pleased at her change of estate. But she is far too strong-willed to show her pleasure or affection and keeps up a noisy demon stration until she feels that she has done all that a well-bred maiden should do.

Her Deduction.

"I'm certain he loves me," said the suburban girl.

"How's that?"

"It is a four mile walk to town. He misses the last car about twice a week, but he still keeps calling."—Exchange.

"Of course I admit your son is extravagant. But you must make allowances; he's young."

"That's all right, but the more allowances I make the quicker he blows out."—Judge.

OUR PUBLIC FORUM

Ralph Peters
On Railway Mail Pay

A controversy has been raging in the columns of the press between the railroads and the Federal Post Office Department over the question of proper compensation for handling the United States mails. Mr. Ralph Peters, Chairman of the Railway Mail Committee, when asked to state the railroad side of the controversy to the American farmer, said in part:

"The railway mail pay question will be settled—and settled permanently and with justice to all concerned—as soon as the American people realize that the whole subject, while seemingly complicated and technical, boils down to a few simple points of fair business dealing which no one need be a rate expert to understand.

"The first is that the Post Office Department weighs the mails, and re-adjusts the pay of the railroads, only once in four years. This compels the railroads to carry the increase in the mail tonnage during the intervening years without pay—manifestly an injustice in the case of a rapidly growing business. One consequence has been that last year the railroads carried fully half the parcel post for nothing.

"A second point is this: In addition to carrying the mails, the railroads are required to operate many traveling post offices for sorting and distributing the mails while in transit. But the Post Office Department pays for such post offices only where they occupy whole cars, and pays nothing in the many cases in which it merely requires the use of post office apartments in combination cars, although such apartments differ from the full railway post office cars only in size. More than 4,200 apartments of this character have been fitted up, and are maintained for the exclusive use of the Post Office Department. Failure to pay for them has been an especial hardship to the smaller roads on which the Department does not find it necessary to utilize whole cars.

"One last point: In thousands of instances (though not in all) the Post Office Department requires the railroads to carry the mails back and forth between railroad stations and post offices, but pays them nothing for this extra service beyond the rates covering the rail transportation. The railroads have no choice but to perform this additional service gratis, or refuse to carry the mails at all.

"Now for the remedies the railroads ask: They do not ask to have the mails weighed daily, or to have each shipment weighed and paid for separately, as is done in the case of private shippers. They merely ask to have the mails weighed, and the pay of the railroads adjusted, at least once a year, instead of once in four years. They also ask that apartment post office cars be paid for, at reasonable rates, according to size. Lastly, they ask that the Post Office Department cease to require of their free messenger service between stations and post offices, and either relieve them of this service or pay fairly for it. These are the reforms the railroads ask of Congress. They gladly lay these reforms before the public, confident that they will appeal to the common sense and fairness of American voters."

Temperance

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union)

EFFECTS OF BEER DRINKING.

The political strength of liquor is furnished by the wine and beer drinkers. Whisky interests may be better organized than the brewers and interfere more actively in politics, but the votes which make possible the sale of intoxicants are not furnished by whisky drinkers, who do not always vote as they drink. The beer drinker generally will vote to protect his habit, because he is far from convinced of its malignancy.—From Editorial in Chicago Tribune.

And that is why the W. C. T. U. and other temperance organizations are bringing to the masses the truth about beer and its malignant effects upon the human organism. Concerning those effects the Life Extension Institute says in a published statement:

"One-half of one quart of beer is sufficient to distinctly impair memory, lower intellectual power and retard simple mental processes, such as the addition of simple figures. This narcotic or deadening influence is first asserted on the higher reasoning powers that control conduct, so that the lower activities of the mind and nervous system are for a time released. The everyday, well-poised, self-controlled man goes to sleep, as it were, and the primitive man temporarily wakes up. Eventually, the nervous system is narcotized, and the drinker becomes sleepy. Muscular efficiency is at first increased a little, and then lowered, the total effect being a loss of working power."

A CORRECTION.

Newspapers and magazines are continually publishing erroneous statements with regard to the number of dry states. A leading weekly periodical publishes a prohibition map showing 17. Iowa is omitted. A writer in one of the June magazines gives the number as 16, Iowa and Idaho both being counted among the wet. Up to September 21, 1914, there were nine prohibition states. Since that time nine more have been added. The 18 prohibition states, in the order of their going dry, are:

Maine	1851
Kansas	1880
North Dakota	1889
Georgia	1907
Oklahoma	1907
North Carolina	1908
Mississippi	1908
Tennessee	1909
West Virginia	1912
Virginia	1914
Colorado	1914
Oregon	1914
Washington	1914
Arizona	1914
Arkansas	1915
Alabama	1915
Idaho	1915
Iowa	1915

PROHIBITION PROGRESS.

(By JAMES MIDDLETON, in World's Work.)

About two years ago Mr. William Jennings Bryan gave a diplomatic dinner in Washington, distinguished particularly by the absence of wine. Immediately the world burst into a roar of laughter; Europeans, especially, hailed the proceeding as an amusing illustration of American provincialism. A few months ago the king of England announced that he would himself abstain from alcoholic drinks for the rest of the war, and that wines would no longer be served in any of the royal households. Nine American states have adopted prohibition in the last eight months. France has legally forbidden the manufacture and sale of absinthe, and the Russian empire is "drier" at the present moment than Kansas or Maine ever were. Facts like these testify to the progress that the cause of antialcoholism has made in less than a year. When the leader of the most sophisticated society in Europe follows the example of our own somewhat homespun secretary of state, the cause of teetotalism has ceased to be ridiculous.

THE SOCIALIST VIEW.

The special committee appointed by the Socialists a year ago to study the liquor problem says in its report, presented May 13 to the national committee in Chicago that "total abstinence is the only absolutely safe and wise course to pursue" in view of the disastrous effects of excessive drinking.

Many of the authorities quoted in the report in condemnation of beer are German. Among alcohol's recorded opponents are 800 German and Austrian doctors. One statement is that "beer is not the harmless beverage many of the German people think it is."

"The Socialist party," declares the report, "cannot remain indifferent or inactive, but should take a definite position and active part in combating the evils of alcoholism."

ILLINOIS GOING DRY.

Illinois had twenty-eight prohibition counties when the women were asked to assist in destroying the saloon by their votes. They responded by driving them out of twenty-three additional counties at the first election. Four more counties were made dry this year, making a total of fifty-five. Seventy county seats are dry; 1,234 out of 1,430 townships in the state have outlawed the saloon. Not one foot of dry territory has been changed to wet during the two years from May 1, 1913, to May 1, 1915.

FEEDING THE DAIRY COWS FOR PROFIT

"The milk flow is most abundant in May and June; hence the wise dairyman tries to duplicate May and June conditions—in other words, study nature and follow nature," was the advice of Professor O. E. Reed, head of the dairy department, Kansas State Agricultural college, in a recent address on "Feeding Dairy Cows." "The feed of that season is not only the most

It is said by admirers of the Ayrshire cow that while she gives a good flow of milk as a two-year-old, she steadily increases it until nine or ten, thereby having the advantage of most of the dairy breeds in at least two more years of usefulness. She is hardy and tough, a good feeder and not dainty in her appetite and thrives on rough food, but is far from slow to respond to good treatment. She is a very persistent milker, giving a uniform quantity well up to another calving. The cow pictured is a pure bred Ayrshire.

abundant of the year, but is also palatable, succulent, easily digested and balanced for milk production; hence the wise dairyman sees that his cows have a ration that combines the above characteristics.

"When the pastures dry up or get short some provision should be made to supplement them. Silage or green crops may be fed at this time. This is the most critical time in the milking period of the cow, and she must not be neglected.

"Winter feed should also be patterned after the abundant pastures of May and June. Dry roughage does not do this. Silage or roots are needed to supply succulence. Silage does not meet all the requirements. It is not a 'balanced ration.' The ration to be balanced must contain protein, the muscle builder, and hence important in milk production, and also carbohydrates, which furnish heat, energy and fat. Such feeds as alfalfa, cowpeas and clover hay, cottonseed and linseed meal and gluten feeds are high in protein, and bran and oats are fairly high. Such feeds as silage, timothy, cane molasses and Sudan grass hay and the fodders and straws are low in protein and high in carbohydrates. The grains of corn and the sorghums have the same characteristics; hence grain and roughage both chosen from one of either of these groups is not properly balanced. We should choose feeds from both groups. Silage or any roughage of the second group should be fed with bran, oats, etc., and not with corn, oilmeal or kafir chop. Alfalfa or any roughage of the first group should be fed with corn, kafir and grains of this class. Silage and alfalfa make a most excellent roughage ration, but the high producing cow will need some grain also.

"The dry cow should receive special care. She should be fed a liberal ration of bran and oats in addition to roughage and be allowed to put on considerable flesh. This will give her more vigor for the next year's work and enable her to produce more and cheaper milk."

POPULAR MECHANICS

Paint Not Impermeable.

A study of paint films has shown that some are much better excluders of water shadders than others. It has been shown that flaked oil films are markedly porous, with the result that water soon penetrates to the surface below and, if it is of iron, sets up corrosion. Most dried paint films are porous, although this porosity may be lessened or prevented by the use of varnish, thus producing a film which is a good excluder. By the use of fine ground pigments the size and number of pores in a film may be very materially reduced, but even then the film is not necessarily a water shedder. Certain pigments seem to convey a peculiar property to a film in that it becomes wet with difficulty or not at all. Water rapidly evaporates or runs off from it and apparently none is retained upon the surface or in the pores.—Engineering Magazine.

Forcing Oil Into a Bearing.

Sometimes when a bearing becomes heated and requires oil it will be found that the oil will not flow down in the oil hole. Either the hole is clogged with dirt or the heat may cause the air to rise and prevent the oil from entering. Where a wire cannot be used effectively, the following remedy, although it is not infallible, is almost sure to make the oil reach the bearing: Fill the hole with oil and quickly place the thumb over it to prevent the air from escaping, and if the oil cup does not leak, the heated oil inside will rise above the oil, and in two or three minutes it will be forced into the bearing, even if it has to pass considerable dirt. When a bearing cannot be reached in this way, and when light oils, such as kerosene, are ineffective, try placing a little mercury in the hole and allow it to remain a few minutes, then use oil.—Popular Mechanics.

The above clearly establishes the fact there will be no more cutting of rates, in order to get business, as each agent is bound by the same laws and rules and the same rates, no matter what company or companies he is representing. At the same time the owners of property can rely upon the fact that if their policy is written in proper form that they have been given the one and only rate upon which their property can be written. There will be no use from this on to go looking for a bargain in insurance rates.

The standard rate heretofore on dwellings has usually been 70c per hundred dollars for a term of three years. This rate has been increased to 28c per annum or two and one half times that for a three year policy making it 70c for three years as compared with 65c heretofore. All summer cottages, or homes vacant in the winter and used only as a summer homes are now 60c per annum or two and one half times, that rate for three years making it $1.50 per hundred dollars insurance for three years. Business blocks and other property remains about the same.

Slightly used Bicycles nt Benjamin Brown's. Prices range from $5.00 to $15.00. A bargain. Adv. 361f.

Fire at Samra's Cafe.

Shortly after five o'clock Monday morning fire was discovered in the small building just south of the Hotel Charlevoix occupied by Alex Samra, the restaurant man. The blaze started under a counter, probably from a match or cigar stub. The blaze was soon gotten under control, but not before the interior of the building was badly smoked up and blistered from the heat. The loss will reach $250.00. Mr. Samra states he will be ready for business again by Saturday of this week.

The safest and surest protection today against fire loss is a policy written by the Myrtle Young Insurance Agency. If you are not protected, see them at once. Adv. 361f.

DISEASE OF YOUNG CATTLE

Blackleg or Quarter Ill Prevalent in Some Sections of County.

Disease Most Prevalent Among Young Cattle—Usually Comes in Spring and Fall.

Many of our stock breeders and farmers will be greatly interested in the article printed below, giving in detail information regarding the dread disease "blackleg," which in some sections of the county is quite prevalent. The article was written by experts in the United States Department of Agriculture, and should be of great help to those whose herds have been afflicted with the disease.

Blackleg, also known as black quarter or quarter ill, is a disease of young cattle characterized by bloody swelling under the skin of the fleshy parts of the body. It is not a contagious disease; that is, animals do not contract it by contact with affected animals. It is an infectious disease; that is, animals get it from soil or pastures in which the spores or seeds of the disease exist. The disease is confined almost entirely to young cattle, and other species of animals are very rarely affected. It is seen most frequently in animals raising in age from 6 months to 2 years, and well-bred, well-conditioned animals seem more susceptible than scrub stock.

Blackleg is caused by a bacillus, called popularly the "blackleg bacillus." This organism produces spores which carry the disease much as the spores or seedling element of ferns spread ferns. The blackleg spores when once established in the soil remain ready to cause trouble for long periods, sometimes several years, until they gain entrance to the animal body, whereupon they grow and reproduce the disease. When this fact is understood, the persistence of the disease in a locality is readily comprehended. Blackleg is a pasture disease, the infective agent being found in the soil, and the germs are taken in with the food and water or through slight wounds in the skin, such as briar pricks or barbed-wire scratches.

The disease manifests itself by swelling under the skin of the fleshy parts of the body, usually the quarters, hence the name "quarter ill." The animal becomes lame and lags behind the herd. In experimentally inoculated animals, they frequently continue to eat as long as they can stand. The swellings, at first hard, hot, and painful, later become cold and insensitive, while the skin becomes discolored and leathery. Gas accumulates underneath the skin so that when pressed with the fingers a crackling sound is heard similar to that produced by placing a piece of paper under the coat and rubbing with the hand. The animal finally goes down and lies struggling upon the ground, catching its breath in gasps, and expelling it with groaning, grunting sounds. The head is frequently thrown to the side.

After death the animal is found lying in distorted positions, and is usually bloated as tightly as the skin will hold, which causes the legs to stick straight out horizontally in a characteristic attitude. Bloody fluid oozes from the natural openings, is forced in drops from the skin, and collects in large blisters under the outer layers.

On cutting into the swollen parts a sweetish, foul-smelling gas rushes out, and a bloody, frothy fluid runs from the opening, sometimes accompanied by the black mushy, disintegrated muscle, which is forcibly blown out by the pressure of gas. The loose tissue underneath the skin is filled with bloody fluid and bubbles of gas, which appear as a quacking gelatinous mass. The divisions between the muscles contain the same fluid and have a greenish metallic color, while the muscles are soft and black.

This condition is not general throughout the body but is confined to certain affected portions. The organs seldom show extensive changes.

Treatment is ineffective after the disease is once fully developed, and death almost invariably results. Some have advocated cutting into the swellings, roweling, and dragging the animals about. Such measures can be too strongly condemned. The fluids which are liberated contain the germs of the disease, and as a result more infection is distributed over the soil.

Prevention consists in vaccination of the susceptible animals and proper disposal of dead carcasses. Vaccine is manufactured by various firms. It is also manufactured and distributed free of charge by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture. Vaccine and directions for its use are sent to stockmen and to the proper state officials upon application by letter to the chief of the bureau.

Blackleg tends to occur in seasons, usually spring and fall, and vaccination should be performed at least one month before the usual time for the outbreak. The best results have followed semi-annual vaccination, beginning at six months and continuing until the animal is 2½ years of age.

Too strong emphasis can not be placed upon the proper disposal of the carcasses. They should not be left for predacious animals and buzzards to tear apart and distribute over the country, but should be buried deeply, without opening, where they die, using quicklime or strong antiseptics to disinfect the carcass and the place where the body has lain.

During the fiscal year 1915, 3,454,628 doses of blackleg vaccine were distributed to stock raisers and farmers in this country. This amount is approximately 45 per cent more than that distributed during the fiscal year 1914. While the percentage of increase of this year's output over that of 1914 is nearly half as great, it does not necessarily follow that blackleg in the United States is greatly on the increase. The difference is due in a large measure to the fact that stockmen in blackleg districts, who heretofore did not vaccinate their animals begin now to recognize the practicability of vaccination.

JACOB KAHLER DEAD

Pioneer Farmer of Bay Township Dies at Home in Potoskey Monday.

Jacob Kahler, a well known pioneer farmer of Bay township, died at his home in Potoskey early last Monday morning, after an illness lasting since Thanksgiving day of last year.

Mr. Kahler was born in Germany April 12, 1842, and came with his parents to this country when but nine years old. They settled in New York state and later came to Michigan. He was married in 1867 and moved to what is known as the Kahler farm in North Bay township in 1883, moving to Potoskey last April.

Mr. Kahler entered the war as a private in Company K, 6th Michigan Cavalry, and served three years and six months. For much of that time he drove General Custer's headquarters wagon, accompanying the general on his fighting through the west.

Funeral services were held from his late home in Potoskey at ten o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

DEATH TAKES A. R. STRUTHERS

Cut in Finger Resulting in Blood Poisoning Cause of Death.

Had Lived in County Since Spring of 1865—Death a Shock to Community.

After less than a week's illness, Andrew R. Struthers, one of Charlevoix county's earliest settlers, died Tuesday evening about four o'clock at his home in Hayea township.

About a week ago while Mr. Struthers was butchering some lambs, he cut his finger. A few days later the wound became infected and blood poison developed. The course of this trouble in connection with a long standing seige of diabetes proved too much for the aged man, and death came as a relief Tuesday afternoon.

Charlevoix county had no man better nor more favorably known than Andrew R. Struthers. He first came here in the spring of 1865, and took up a homestead. He and his wife spent the first summer of their married life in a squatters cabin on the present site of South Arm Village. He lived there until 1878 when he purchased the farm where he died.

In this issue of the Courier we are unable to go into the details of the early life and experiences of Mr. Struthers, but in next week's issue will give these facts in detail.

Funeral arrangements are not as yet available, owing to the uncertainty of the time of arrival of his sons and daughter from Oregon.

Closed for Holidays.

In honor of the Jewish New Year's holiday, the stores of C. Danto & Son and M. A. Levinson & Co. were closed last week from 5:00 Wednesday night until 5:30 p. m. Friday evening. This year the holiday came earlier than it has for many years. Last year it came about ten days later. According to Jewish belief this is year 5775, dating from the creation and not from the birth of Christ.

REVIEW OF WORK ACCOMPLISHED BY CHARLEVOIX COUNTY Y. M. C. A.

Three Hundred Meetings Held With Total Attendance of Four Thousand Two Hundred—Eighteen Delegates Attend Older Boys' Conference at Ann Arbor—Much Good Has Been Accomplished.

About a year ago now the county committee of the Charlevoix County Young Men's Christian Association met and after a lengthy consideration of matters pertaining to the work, came to the conclusion that it would be necessary for them to discontinue the active work which they had been conducting during the previous two years. A short time elapsed following this, when another meeting was called and the members decided as they were only acting for the men and women of the county who had been contributing to the maintenance of the work, it would be well to present the matter to them for their consideration and if they advised it, then the work which had accomplished such satisfactory results up to that time would be continued.

The answer which the committee received was very encouraging, for the people who were interviewed not only expressed a real interest in the work which the association was doing amongst the boys in the towns, and in the country, but also made their pledges to assist the committee in financing the work. Four hundred and twenty three individuals contributed three thousand and thirty dollars, making the average gift about seven dollars. Having practically completed the years work for which these gifts were made, the committee is desirous of reporting its accomplishments to all friends of the work throughout the county. It is not a record of successive victories, nor is it an account of continuous defeat. It is the record of a steady normal growth that the committee has desired.

Following the work of securing the necessary financial support for the work of the committee which lasted well into October, the matter of group organizations was taken up, for this is considered, though there is nothing spectacular about it, the fundamental work of the Rural Y. M. C. A. However, before groups of boys can be organized the necessary leadership must be secured, and this furnishes the largest problem for a county secretary. No community in any county boasts an over abundance of older boys and men who are both willing and qualified to assume responsibilities of this sort. During the fall eleven groups were organized with a membership of two hundred and eight. During the year three hundred meetings were held with a total attendance of four thousand two hundred and an average attendance of one hundred and fifty four. The program for these meetings were prepared by the county secretary in conference with the group leaders and provided for Bible study, educational talks, non-equipment games and social activities. All leaders made it a practice to begin and close meetings promptly in an effort to educate the members away from the common American practice of going late to a meeting and thus making it necessary to continue the meeting beyond the hour set for closing.

Very few, if any, of the delegates attending the annual Older Boys' Conference at Ann Arbor during the Thanksgiving recess had to travel as far as those coming from Charlevoix county. Considering the expense involved, though it was nothing when compared with the good derived, eighteen delegates was more than a satisfactory number to attend from this county. This was the largest conference of its kind ever held in North America and was conducted by the State Y. M. C. A. Committee to further interest Michigan boys in all phases of constructive living. Acting on resolutions made during this gathering, several of the Charlevoix county delegation joined the church upon their return home. This year the conference will be held at Kalamazoo.

In February, as a result of previous arrangements made by the county committee, Charlie M. Carson, factory manager for the Cadillac Motor Car Co., came to the county to tell in his straight forward, business like way what the business world thinks about the use of cigarettes. Mr. Carson spoke before the boys and girls of all the high and grammar schools of the county. At the time of this campaign every high school fellow was presented with a copy of Henry Ford's booklet, "The Case Against the Little White Slave."

No one event touching the boy life of the county has been of any greater importance than the second annual County Boy's Conference. Thirteen different communities of the county were represented by ninety four delegates, who were splendidly entertained in East Jordan homes during the conference. One hundred and sixty men and boys attended the conference banquet where Gerrit Masselink, of Big Rapids, delivered as helpful and inspiring an address as was ever listened to by a Charlevoix county gathering. During the different sessions, papers were read by delegates touching on topics of interest to live fellows and each paper was followed by a spirited discussion. At the closing session of the conference twenty delegates signified their desire to lead a Christian life. The county committee considers this feature of the work of sufficient importance to make it an annual Y. M. C. A. event.

This is the fourth year that the high schools of the county have been represented at the State High School Conference held at the close of each school year at the State Camp on Torch Lake. This season Leo Butler of Charlevoix was awarded one of the trophy cups given to the winners of the conference tennis match in doubles.

During the current year ten association fellows have united with the various churches of the county. One pastor has told the secretary that they make as satisfactory "working members" as he has in his church.

Last year very little was contributed by the schools to assist in carrying on the Township Play Festivals. This year they were practically self supporting. These events continue to meet with the approval of the parents and school officers of the rural schools and provide the children with what they crave—organized play properly supervised. One grammar school play festival was conducted during the spring, making it possible for the children below the high school to enjoy organized fun. As yet the desire to win looms up so large that it blinds the vision of those who should be most deeply interested in the physical welfare of high school fellows. Regardless of how it effects the winning or losing of the schools a plan which brings into active competition 75 per cent to 80 per cent of the high school boys of the county should commend itself over any plan which simply caters to the interests of a few accomplished athletes. Believing that if athletics were worth anything they were worth something to every high school boy who was physically fit, the County Committee has made an effort to establish the weight basis system of competition for track athletics in the county. Considering that the plan is new and little understood, it is not surprising that those who have become accustomed to the old method of competition cry out against it. The "meet" this year was held at Boyne City.

Above have been mentioned some few features of the work which the County Y. M. C. A. Committee is forwarding in this county. An attempt has not been made to mention every detail of the work, and it is probable that some important and interesting things have been omitted for the employed officer who serves as the committee's representative has abundant opportunity to touch in a vital way the lives of the young men of the county. This report will not be of interest to those who are looking for the spectacular. Such things are seldom permanent, so first things have been put first. During Christ's early ministry he was troubled by those who wanted him to do something out of the ordinary. Every one took note of the miracles, but only a few appreciated the natural growth of the kingdom. Today many people in the county judge the rural Y. M. C. A. on a basis of the spectacular. Only a few appreciate the value of an organization whose growth is sure and steady. Often the Master had to hurry away from the miracle hunting crowd. Today the Rural Y. M. C. A. is bandied by the crowd that continually cries out for the spectacular.

For whatever of success has attended the Rural Y. M. C. A. movement during the past year, the County Committee realizes that it is indebted to a large circle of friends. To all such the committee, in behalf of the boys of the county, wish to express their thanks.

TWO DEATHS AT BELVEDERE

Both Summer Residents Who Have Been Coming Here for Many Years.

Two deaths occurred at the Belvedere during the past week among the members of the summer colony who have been coming to Charlevoix for a number of years.

Mrs. Virginia Bailey, wife of Samuel Bailey Jr., of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Pasadena, California, died suddenly Tuesday morning. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey were among the oldest of the summer residents at the Belvedere, having spent their summers here for the past 18 years. Deceased was about 76 years old. The remains were taken to Cincinnati, Wednesday morning for interment.

The death of Mrs. Samuel Ourbacker of Louisville, Kentucky, occurred also at the Belvedere Friday morning at 5:30. The deceased was in apparent good health on the day prior to her death, and during the day was in the hotel lobby. She had spent the last 18 seasons in Charlevoix, and was one of Charlevoix's well known summer residents. Her remains were taken to Louisville, Friday, for interment.

MOVE TO CLEAN UP THE PARK

Thursday, September 23, Officially Set Aside as Park Clean-up Day.

Ladies Will Serve Lunches and Hot Coffee at Noon Hour—Everyone Urged to Help.

For sometime a movement has been under way to set aside a day for a general cleaning up of the city park. The move met the approval of most citizens and it has finally been decided to make Thursday, September 23, general park clean-up day.

The work will be done under the supervision of the Park committee and Street commissioner. Every citizen is urged to help in the work. The day, early as possible, on the above day, ready to do what they can to beautify the park. Forks, shovels and hoes will be in great demand, and if you have none, borrow and be on hand to do your part.

During the noon hour the ladies will serve a lunch and hot coffee. It might be well to state here that the ladies have done a great deal toward making this day successful. For some time a subscription paper has been circulated, and quite an amount of money raised to be used in various ways to beautify the park.

Underbrush will be cut, old limbs and logs cleaned up, unsightly spots beautified as much as possible, and when the day is over, the park will undoubtedly be in the best shape in its history.

Let every red-blooded citizen do his part in making the day a success.

State Tax Printing.

Last week the Courier was in receipt of a contract from Auditor General Fuller for the publication of the order and petition including the list of lands to be advertised for sale in Charlevoix county at the ensuing general tax sale in May, 1916.

This list will be published in the Courier some time during the months of March and April.

Crop correspondents, quite generally, complain of the excessive moisture doing considerable damage to wheat, oats, rye, corn, beans, potatoes and hay. Twenty-six of the twenty-seven northern counties in the lower peninsula report a heavy frost on August the 27th which did serious damage to corn, beans, buckwheat, potatoes, cucumbers and late peas.

Races Well Attended.

Good crowds were in attendance at the Roller Skating Rink on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evening of last week, the chief attraction being a mile race between Mrs. Jack Fitch and Mrs. Allie Moore. Mrs. Fitch won the first race, the second going to Mrs. Moore. The deciding race took place on Saturday evening and the decision was awarded to Mrs. Fitch. However, it was the opinion of the audience that Mrs. Moore would have been an easy winner had she not fell on the 10th lap. Mr. and Mrs. Fitch gave an exhibition of fancy skating, which was greatly appreciated by the good crowd present on the last night.

WHEN the republicans made the tariff, unemployment and other national questions an issue in the mayoralty campaign of last spring, the highbrow element thought it was to laugh. But the people understood and Mayor Thompson of Chicago was swept into office by 150,000 majority.

Now everybody is coming to understand that a free trade tariff—with its accompaniment of shortened hours, curtailed wages or lack of employment altogether—has a distinct bearing upon municipal affairs; and the most emphatic evidence of this is found in the enormously increased demands upon the municipal and county treasuries for the support or assistance of dependents or quasi-dependents.

According to the figures of the poor relief department of the county, the department in February of the present year fed as many people as live in Springfield, Illinois, the third largest city of the state. Last year the county agent aided directly 100,000 persons.
This year the estimate is that 200,000, or twice the number cared for last year, will be fed, clothed, and warmed at the expense of the taxpayers. Consequently more taxes will have to be collected to pay the increased bill. Cook county's grand total for charitable purposes last year was $2,275,510.

If the population provided for at the county hospital and Oak Forest, together with one-half of the 18,208 patients visited at their homes by the county agent's physicians, and who do not receive other assistance, and also the 2,588 non-residents and aliens given temporary assistance in 1914, are added to those directly assisted, it is estimated that in round figures the actual total of those assisted will come close to 125,000, and exceed the combined population of Georgia and Springfield. This population represents persons cared for by the institutions organized and operated under the pauper act; that is, poor relief department, county hospital and infirmary, including the tuberculosis hospital at Oak Forest.

These figures do not include the 16,268 patients treated at dispensaries operated in connection with the county hospital, nor the 5,789 children cared for by the juvenile court, which are also poverty's contribution to the charity service of Cook county.

In other words, the application of democratic policies in the nation—as shown by the Underwood tariff and its effects—has just about doubled the number of people who cannot earn a whole living in Chicago.

They may growl and fret at having to resume their toll. But not one in ten would remain at home if given the chance. As a matter of fact, the time hangs rather heavy on their hands before the long vacation is over.

It takes an inventive child mind to find a sufficient number and varieties of play to fill a whole vacation. By September about all of the known pastimes have been thoroughly tried out, and all possible joy extracted. Most children are willing to work at school tasks, if the proper incentives are applied. They may not see the inherent value of what they are doing. But they are accessible to the motive of competition. The position at the head of the class will never lose its allurements.

WHAT is so rare as a dry day in Sep-

All-Aboard Chestnut Specials

A dorky was out fishing with a little boy about 4 years old, and while at play on the bank of the stream the youngster fell into the water. Immediately the colored man waded in and, catching him by the seat of the pantaloons, pulled him onto dry land. A minister who happened to have seen the occurrence complimented him, for the stream was a swift one. "Well," said the dorky,
"I had to save dat kid's life, boss, fo'
he had de bait in his pocket."

That a patient at Petoskey hospital fancied there was something the matter with his heart. His physician made a cursory examination in the patient's cordial region. "There certainly appears to be an extraordinary swelling here," said the doctor, tapping with his finger on the patient's side.
"We must reduce this at once." Whereupon a faint smile appeared on the patient's worried countenance. "Oh, Doctor," he exclaimed, "that swelling is my pocketbook. Please don't reduce it too much."

A native of Ireland started away on his first trip. Never having been in a railroad station he did not know how to get his ticket, but he saw a lady going in and determined to follow her lead.
The lady went to the ticket office and putting down her money said: "Mary-hill, single." Next in line was Pat, who promptly planked down his money and said: "Potrick Murphy, married."

Old Mrs. Simmers was quite well-to-do but parsimonious. She was very pious and attended all church meetings regularly, but her contributions to the collection plate would certainly have enriched no one. One Sunday morning she took her little grandson to church with her. The boy watched everything with bright and hawklike eyes, and he took a deep interest in the discussion that followed at home later, during the dinner. "How was the sermon?" asked Mrs. Simmer's daughter. "Poor," said Grandma Simmer's emphatically,
"mighty poor." "But, grandma," said the little boy interrupting her quietly, "what could you expect for a penny?"

The proprietor of a local drug store recently received this curt and haughty hand: "I do not want vasoline, but

IMPORTANCE OF GOOD ROADS.

To have good roads everywhere throughout these United States will mean more to this nation than any other development since our Declaration of Independence. During all ages it has been of primary importance to provide a people with means of intercommunication.
People, like water, must move or stagnate. They must run and play like the brook itself or become sluggish and dull—to themselves as well as to others. Of the seven modes of intercommunication—water, roads, post, railroad, telegraph, telephone and wireless—only one—roads—is free to all the people of the earth.
Roads are the most universally used and are therefore the most beneficial to the greatest number of people. The importance of good roads everywhere is paramount—their benefits are all-embracing.—Charles Henry Davis, President National Highways Association.

NATIONAL HIGHWAYS.

Influence of Automobiles Has Revived Interest in These Roads.

The unit of public road building in this country outside of the municipalities has generally been the township.
Improvement stopped at the township line, and there was no assurance on entering upon a stretch of good road that it would carry you beyond the township you were in. We have got beyond that. The automobile in its rapid movement soon passes through a township or a county and wants a good road all the way. It has little use for state lines either, and the needs and influence of automobiles have revived a strong country wide interest in national roads, says the Philadelphia Press.

Before railroad construction robbed the early road building movement of all its vitality we started on national road building. The Cumberland road, 800 miles in length, running from the head of navigation on the Potomac river to Vandalia, Ill., is the best example of early national road making. It had an important part in the opening of the west, but the federal government came under anti-improvement influences and never finished or duplicated it. There is a great clamor at every session of congress for national aid to road building, but the proposition generally is to aid road building by the state and not the construction of roads that will be national in their plan, construction and maintenance.

The Lincoln highway, projected by an association, is intended to be a coast-to coast highway, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and is partially constructed along its western half. The Dixie highway, another project, is to extend from Michigan to Florida. Another contemplated road of magnificent distance is the Pacific road, which is to extend from Port Barrow, Alaska, to the City of Mexico. A portion of this road in the state of Washington is already graded, gravelled and in use. It is the cost the general plan of road building contemplates many roads for short or distances.

The ocean to ocean and lake to gulf national highways, when they shall be finished as good roads, will be an acquisition of great value to the nation.
"See America first" will be made easy of accomplishment to all who ride in automobiles, and their yearly increasing number promises to include shortly all those who can travel at all. We cannot have too many of them, and their influence in uniting the country, breaking down the superstitions that grow out of the habit of keeping close within state boundaries and making a homogeneous and more perfect union can hardly be overestimated.

"OLD HICKORY" ROAD.

Tennessee to Reconstruct Highway
Long Used by Andrew Jackson.

While Tennessee is building good roads under the tremendous general impetus that has been created by the Dixie highway movement she will honor the memory of President Andrew Jackson by the construction of a road to be known as the Old Hickory highway, running from Knoxville to Bristol.

This highway will follow the route which Andrew Jackson, or Old Hickory, used in his trips from Knoxville to Washington. The road originally was a pioneer's trail and has been used ever since. It was the stagecoach pike in the days of Jackson and since then has been known as the Old Hickory stage road.

Money and labor for the rehabilitation of this highway has been provided for. This is a very remarkable route from the fact that there are neither ferries nor mountains to cross, and the grade runs considerable under 2 per cent the greater part of the way.

This is a much shorter line than the Memphis-Bristol highway and because passing through the great mineral spring section of east Tennessee is highly attractive. Sullivan county has a pike from Bristol to the county line, Hawkins by the recent $500,000 bond issue which it voted provided for a pike to the Granger line, and Knox under its $500,000 bond issue will build a pike from Knoxville to the Granger county line.

Upon being examined, it was found that the bullet had struck him in the hip, narrowly missing the intestines, but will not prove a serious injury.

When Mark Twain, in his early days, was editor of a Missouri paper, a superstitious subscriber wrote to him saying that he had found a spider in his paper, and asking him whether that was a sign of good or bad. The humorist printed the following answer: "Old Subscriber: Finding a spider in your paper was neither good luck nor bad luck for you. The spider was merely looking over our paper to see which merchant is not advertising, so that he can go to that store, spin his web across the door, and lead a life of undisturbed peace ever afterward."

SEASIDE ENGINEERING.

Method of Beach Protection Employed at Atlantic City.

Inasmuch as a permanent, smooth beach is one of the requirements of a successful seaside resort, the separate interests which control the beach at Atlantic City have made it their practice to build shore protection structures all along the frequented part of the beach, which is the entire city ocean front. Unfortunately this construction has not been under the charge of any central authority, so that various methods have been used to prevent the beach from eroding, says the Engineering News. Some of these have been successful, while others have not served the purpose for which they were designed.

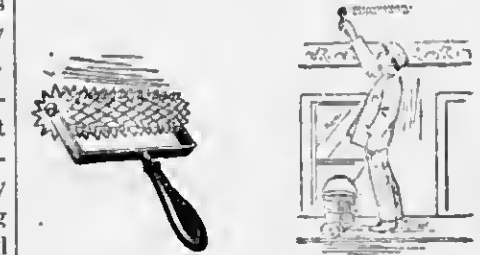

At Atlantic City the prevailing type of protection is the timber groin and timber wall, although in a few cases stone groins have been built. The best wall which is now in service is the one which has been built by the Hotel Chalfonte owners to protect the beach in front of that hotel. In consists of a row of piles about four feet center to center, penetrating from ten to fifteen feet and projecting about five feet above the sand. Near the top of the piles a 6 by 6 inch timber is fastened. Two rows of two inch sheathing are then driven in front of the 6 by 6 inch stick and fastened to it, and in front of the sheathing a riprap protection is dumped.

Another wall is built very nearly according to the same design as the one just mentioned, but the stone protection has been left off in front and instead there has been placed a banking of sand to the rear of the sheet piles. It is important to note that groins when well built and properly located will raise the beach level, but will not protect the shore line against storms. Shore protection, such as sea walls, if well built will protect the shore line, but will not at the same time cause a greater scouring action and thereby tend to lower the beach.

WALL PAPER REMOVER.

Implement That Facilitates Softening of Old Covering.

A practical tool has been invented by a German paperhanger, by the aid of which old paper may be more readily removed from the walls of rooms before hanging fresh wall paper. A number of toothed disks are mounted on a shaft revolving in a yoke to which a handle is attached. By rolling this implement over the wall the paper is perforated, and when soaked in the ordinary way the moisture penetrates between the wall and the old paper, making removal easy.

Lubricating Auto Springs.

The leaves of automobile springs soon become dry and develop a squeak which is very annoying. An easy and effective manner to remedy this trouble is the following: Obtain some fine bronze wire mesh and cut it into strips the same length and width as the leaves of the springs. Fill the spaces between the wires with hard oil or grease by placing the screen on a flat surface and using a putty knife or a flexible strip of steel to spread the grease. Take the springs apart and build them up again, inserting the greased mesh between the leaves. This will stop all squeaking and produce easier riding for a long time.

Tempering Gun Spring.

To temper spring for gun, heat the spring in a clear fire, free from sulphur, to a bright cherry red and dip it in tallow. Remove it from the tallow and hold it all dripping with the tallow, over a clear fire until the tallow takes fire and blazes off. It is best to dip it in the tallow and blaze off the second time.

Cleaning Before Painting.
The proper cleaning of the surface of iron and steel, and of other materials, is of the utmost importance. Paint which is put on a surface covered with grease or dirt does not come into good contact with the metal and consequently does not adhere to it. Sooner or later the dirt will fall off and the paint will come with it. Rooms and other parts which are treated with heavy oil or which have been allowed to lie on the ground until they are covered with mud and dirt should be thoroughly cleaned before painting. If it is desired that protection of any part of the building be secured—Englund the Painter.

OUR PUBLIC FORUM

C. E. Schaff

On Rights of the Common Carrier

C. E. Schaff

The time has arrived when the average citizen, it matters not what his vocation, needs to give a more serious thought to the railroad problem. In days gone by, this question was largely regarded as one which concerned only those who were interested in railroad securities or those whose living was directly or indirectly derived from them; in short, as a more or less "private affair" rather than one which holds within its grasp a large share of the welfare and prosperity of the entire country.

Since the Federal Government and the several states have taken over the regulation and control of the carriers, since the great and vital power to make and unmake railroad rates has been placed in the hands of the Commissions, which, in states at least, are more or less responsive to public sentiment, it becomes incumbent upon every citizen to inform himself upon the underlying facts, lest he unconsciously and unwittingly contribute to an erroneous and mistaken public policy, unfortunate not merely for the railroads, but equally so for the masses of the people.

When an industry which transacts a fourth of the nation's annual volume of business is ailing, it is absolutely certain to precipitate a condition of general stagnation and depression in all other industries. The desperate efforts made by the railroads to reduce their operating expenses through forced economies had their inevitable result in the recent severe depression in the commerce and industry of the country, which threw out of employment thousands of workmen and reduced or destroyed the incomes of thousands dependent upon returns from investments.

Rate increases are necessary to relieve the present distressing situation of the railroads. When the Federal Government and the several states appropriated to themselves the power to lower railroad rates they at the same time assumed the solemn obligation to raise them if the financial condition of the carriers requires it. The right of the state to fix lower rates is for the purpose of protecting the public against paying tribute. It is a right which every broad-minded railroad man freely acknowledges. The obligation to raise them is a solemn duty not only to the vast army of people dependent upon the operation of railroads, but also to those who own railroad securities, and who, in common with other citizens, are entitled to justice and protection. The time has come when the Commissions in the different states must deal fairly and frankly with the railroads, when they must divest themselves of future political considerations and act as fair-minded arbiters in the matter of just intra-state rates, bearing in mind the rights of both the public and the carriers, and the necessity of promoting the nation's commerce by the provision of adequate transportation facilities through the investment of private capital.

NO MODEL LICENSE LAW.

Major Dan Morgan Smith was for four years general counsel for the liquor organization known as the Model License league. The following paragraphs from an address of his shows why he threw up that position and is now speaking and working for prohibition.

"For four years I advocated the passage of a model license law as a means of lessening the evils of drink. As the head of the law department of one of the three largest liquor associations in America, I maintained that its passage would take the liquor dealers out of politics and the law-breakers out of the liquor business."

"Waa I wrong? I shall never know, for the liquor crowd were paying me to talk reform and paying others to defeat reform!"

"The model license law was effective as a vote-getter, but it never cleaned out one dive, never effected one reform, for, although advocated in every fight against prohibition in the last six years, it has never been enacted in any place. Its advocacy has fooled more decent people into voting with the liquor crowd than all the specious nonsense about taxes and personal liberty put together. Can we expect laws from the liquor camp that will eliminate the dive, or lessen drunkenness or stop the sale of liquor to minors? Can we expect brewery agents to pass laws that will take away the license of brewery-owned saloons? Can we expect legislators, nominated and elected by the brewery interests, to pass laws that will take the liquor business out of politics? No, the only thing we can expect from the liquor people is just what we have received in the past—lying promises."

PLEA FOR THE CHILD.

(From Address by FATHER PATRICK MURPHY of Texas.)

I content tonight that there are helpless children whose little bodies are crying out for nourishment—the food they need—and yet the mother cannot cook it for them because that bunch got all the money first! The little child is crying. I'll tell you, and I am sure any doctors in the audience will hear me out, when a child in the poorer homes is not properly nourished, its pain is not in the stomach alone; there is not a blood cell in its little body that is not suffering. I maintain that you men who are going to vote wet, should think of this: There is not a blood cell in the child's body that is not crying out in your God against you.

In your city there are little wasted hands raised up in pleading. You will find them in the homes of your drunkards. You will see the faces of the little ones, thin, emaciated and telling pathetically of their hungry bodies. These little children are praying that you will decide a great question regardless of what you seem to lose by it.

The following is quoted from a letter written by Senator Moses E. Clapp of Minnesota to George W. Perkins, chairman of the Progressive national committee: "The prohibition movement today differs from that movement in other times. When you and I were boys, every spring there was seen a temperance agitation and everybody took the pledge. Some kept it and some did not. The present movement is entirely different. There is no hysteria or excitement about it. It is simply a calm, deliberate judgment on the part of the American people, from the man who employs to the man who is employed, that the saloon is a menace. Having come in this quiet way, free from hysteria and excitement, and as a result of deliberate judgment, I am inclined to think it is here to stay, and if times are good, is liable to be more of a factor than we sometimes suppose."

IN RUSSIA.

From July to December there were recorded in Petrograd in 1913 ninety-seven suicides, but in 1914 only fourteen. The same phenomenon was observed in Warsaw, where during the first half of 1914 there were recorded 110 suicides, and during the second half only 205. The reduction of the number of small loans made by the pawnshops, and the increase of the deposits in the savings banks, were among the further gratifying results of temperance. For the first two months of 1915 the savings banks of Petrograd received deposits exceeding the figures for the corresponding months of 1914 by one and a half million rubles ($150,000), while throughout Russia the quantity of deposits increased by a hundred billion rubles ($10,000,000).

Boys Under Seventeen Cannot Hunt At All

Except Upon Farm Owned by Their Parents Upon Which They Are Regularly Domiciled.

State Game Warden William R. Oates has uocorked a surprise for hunters all over the state by his interpretation of certain angles of the new game law in response to an inquiry written direct to him by the editor of the Courier.

The time-honored right of the boy with a musket and dog to go out and kill rabbits and birds, providing he is under seventeen years of age, is gone, unless he confines himself to hunting upon the land owned by his parents upon which he is regularly domiciled.

This puts a stop to the city boy under seventeen years doing any hunting whatever. They cannot use firearms in the city nor are they allowed outside of the city with them. These boys cannot secure a license or hunt without one. The farm boy can hunt in his own pasture lot or swamp, but cannot get over onto his neighbor's land.

Commissioner Oates wrote the Courier as follows, which we publish in full for the benefit of our readers:

Lansing, September 9, 1915.

Editor, Courier:

Replying to your letter of August 30th, will say that it is the opinion of this department that the legislature, in passing the hunters license law, intended to preclude minors under seventeen years of age from using a gun for the purpose of hunting any wild animals or birds of this state except upon the enclosed land of their parents upon which they are regularly domiciled.

Section 1, Act 108 of the public acts of 1913, as amended by Act 211 of the public acts of 1915, reads in part as follows:

"It shall be unlawful for any person to hunt for, kill, pursue or take in any manner any of the wild animals protected by the laws of this state without having secured a license to do so in accordance with the provisions of this act, provided that the provisions of this section shall not apply to residents of this state and their minor children when hunting upon their own enclosed lands upon which they are regularly domiciled."

Section 2 reads in part as follows: "Any person 17 years of age or over may procure a license by filing his affidavit with the County Clerk or any of his deputies in the county of which the applicant is a resident, or the State Game, Fish and Forestry Warden or any of his deputies or any other person whom the State Game, Fish and Forestry Warden may appoint for the purpose of selling licenses within this state or outside of this State."

It will be noted that section 1 of this act prohibits any person from hunting, pursuing or killing wild animals or birds protected by the laws of this state unless they have secured a license to do so and excepted from the provisions of the act residents in this state and their minor children while hunting on their own enclosed lands on which they are regularly domiciled.

Section 2 provides a manner in which licenses may be secured and provides that any person seventeen years of age or over may procure a license for the purpose of hunting but it made no provisions whatever for minors under seventeen years of age to secure a license. Therefore, I am of the opinion that it was clearly the intention of the legislature to prohibit minors under seventeen years of age from hunting in any manner or in any place except upon the enclosed lands of their parents upon which they are regularly domiciled.

We know of no reason why a boy under seventeen years of age could not accompany his parents on a hunting trip if they desire him to do so, provided such boys do not carry a gun or take any part in the act of hunting. Yours very truly, W. R. Oates, Commissioner.

PLAN FOR STATE WIDE PROHIBITION

Initial Steps Taken by Local W. C. T. U. to Raise Funds.

Details of Meeting Held at Home of Mrs. John Burns Last Friday Afternoon.

The W. C. T. U. met with Mrs. John Burns, Friday for its September meeting. The meeting opened with singing a verse or two of "Stand up for Jesus," this was followed with repeating of favorite texts of scripture by those present and repeating together of the Lord's prayer.

Plans for state wide prohibition were talked of and how to raise funds for same. It was decided to raise the fund equal to 30 cents a member for the entire membership. In order to do this, it was suggested to form several groups with a chairman for each group to look after the work.

Five copies of the Young Crusader will be subscribed for by the union, to be sent to as many teachers in the lower grades, to assist them in teaching temperance truths to their pupils.

The district convention will be held in Mancelona in November, and delegates will be sent from the Charlevoix union.

One gave her name as a member of the union and later still another one. The topic for the day was "Franchise." Mrs. Himes had the program in charge. The first number was a solo, by Mrs. Goetz. The reading by Mrs. Campbell of the story of Lucy Stone was intensely interesting. Mrs. Goetz sang another solo and in response to the encore, she sang "Jamie Dear." A rising vote of thanks was given her for her singing. Readings by Mrs. Saltonstall, and Mrs. Usher, the latter reading "The Pioneer Mother."

Reading by Mrs. J. Burns, "Suffrage in Illinois."

Remarks by Mrs. Alex and Miss Himes followed with a talk on Miss Jane Adams the noted settlement worker in Chicago, on "Peace." It will be remembered that Miss Jane Adams was one of the delegates to the "Women's Peace Conference," held at "The Hague" some months ago.

Mrs. Coulter sang a solo, "Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond," a Scotch song. As a response to the hearty encore, Mrs. Coulter gave another selection, which closed this very interesting program.

THEATRICAL

J. C. Hackett who plays the role of confidential secretary to Richard Ward (Cyril Keightley) in George Kleine's splendid film version of Porter Browne's, "The Spendthrift," enjoys the unique distinction of being the only American actor who ever led a Chinese cruiser into action. Mr. Hackett was formerly an officer in the Chinese navy and served through the war between China and Japan, during the course of which he was wounded several times. In spite of his service under the Dragon Flag, Mr. Hackett is a thorough-going American. In addition to his dramatic work and his experience on the decks of men-of-war, he is a magazine writer of considerable prominence and a contributor to a number of the country's leading fiction periodicals. "The Spendthrift" opens at the Majestic Theatre on September 17.

Located at Highland Park.

"We are now located in Highland Park and hard at work on our new job," writes I. M. DeVoe, former superintendent of our city schools. Mr. DeVoe's address is 200 Highland Park, Michigan, and his many Charlevoix friends wish him success in abundance in his new location.

Friends Gather to Pay Last Respects to Andrew R. Struthers.

Death Again Takes a Pioneer Settler Who Had Lived in County Since 1864.

A Good Man in the broadest sense of that term has passed on, leaving with us a record of undeviating honor, an absolutely unselfish consideration for the interests of other men, with a calm, patient and gentle demeanor which was the reflex of his ideal though stalwart character.

Andrew R. Struthers was a native of Scotland, born in the historic city of Glasgow on the 18th day of June, 1841. His grandfather, a sturdy highlander, was a sergeant in a Scottish regiment during the Napoleonic wars and took part in the battle of Waterloo, and his father, John Struthers, who spent much of his life in Glasgow, was by occupation a cotton spinner.

In 1845, at the age of four years, he moved with his father and family to America, and settled in New York, which at that time was but a small place. He lived there two years, when the family removed to Schrevesville, New Jersey, living there about three years, when they removed to Victoria, Canada. It was here that the subject received his education, entering college at the age of 16 years, and graduating from the Normal at Toronto at the age of 18.

On account of being slightly deaf, he was unable to take the position in life he really desired and started work in a woolen mill, following this occupation until 1861, when he came to Michigan, locating at Saginaw. He then took up marine engineering, which he followed until 1863.

On November 11, 1863, he was united in the bonds of wedlock with Miss Elizabeth Walker of Milverton, Ontario, and on the following spring took possession of a claim in Charlevoix county, which he had entered the preceding fall. Mr. and Mrs. Struthers spent the first summer of their married life in a squatter's cabin on the present site of what was known as South Arm village, and during the time the husband obtained a livelihood principally fishing and hunting, in connection with which he also raised about 200 bushels of potatoes on what ground he had cleared. At the time Mr. Struthers settled in this vicinity, the only settlers besides himself and wife were Elijah Holben, a Mr. Clark and a gentleman by the name of Roe and their respective families.

A few years later he sold his holding in South Arm and settled on sections 29, 30, 28 and 21 in Hayes township, where he lived the remainder of his life. Here he began farming under rather discouraging circumstances, being without a team, as were also his neighbors. In 1868 he was elected supervisor of South Arm township, and with the salary thus earned, purchased an unbroken steer and a cow, inter trading the cow for an ox, and in due time the animals were trained to the yoke, and with them the work of clearing and cultivating the farm progressed. During the winter of 1867 Mr. Struthers went six miles from home to cut wood, leaving his wife alone from Sunday until the following Saturday. On many occasions he was obliged to walk to Charlevoix, a distance of nine miles, and carry a sack of provisions weighing seventy pounds back to his home.

Deceased leaves to mourn his departure his aged wife, seven children, twenty-five grandchildren, two great grandchildren, one sister and two brothers. Funeral services were held from the home Tuesday afternoon, Rev. Quinton Walker, officiating. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

DESIRE PICNIC SITE

Odd Fellows of County Take Initial Steps to Obtain One.

At the Second Annual Picnic of the Odd Fellows of Charlevoix county a picnic association was formed for the purpose of securing a permanent site for the annual event. No decision has been reached as yet as to where the site will be located but it will be on the shores of Pine Lake somewhere. The plan is to erect suitable buildings and make the grounds open for all Odd Fellows either individually, as a lodge or as an association.

The committee in charge has evolved a plan whereby the nucleus of such a fund may be raised and information regarding it will soon be given out. By a little effort on the part of each individual member the entire plan may be easily carried out.

YOUNG COUPLE MARRIED TUESDAY

Earl A. Young and Irene E. Harsha Married at Home of Bride.

Tell for Extended Auto Trip to Detroit, and Chicago after Wedding Breakfast.

Earl A. Young and Miss Irene E. Harsha were united in marriage at the home of the brides parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Harsha, Tuesday morning at 7:00 o'clock. Rev. Holden A. Putnam of Ludington and Rev. C. E. Taggart of this city officiated, the congregational ring service being used.

The bride party took their places to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, in front of the mantel which was artistically decorated for the occasion. The couple were unattended and only the immediate family and a few intimate friends were present at the ceremony.

The bride was gowned in white chiffon over white silk with pink rose buds and carried a shower bouquet of roses. The groom wore the usual conventional black. The floral decorations consisted of asters, ferns, smilax and gladiolus, the color scheme of pink and white being carried out, the arrangement of which was placed by Mrs. J. W. Harris.

Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served, after which the young couple left in Mr. Young's auto for a trip to Detroit, Chicago and other southern points. The out of town guests present were Mrs. J. W. Harris of Oak Park, Wm. Harsha of Traverse City and Harry Bowen of Detroit.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Young are well known young people, having graduated from the local schools. They have both been identified with the young people in the Congregational church all their lives. Mr. and Mrs. Young will locate here where the former is engaged in the insurance business. They have the best wishes and hearty congratulations of their many friends, who await their home-coming.

TREASURER WEAVER HAS SENT OUT NOTICES TO DELINQUENTS

He Finds $1,618.12 of the 1913 Tax Still Due in the City of Charlevoix—Fees and Interest Add $647.25 More—Many Owners to Whom Notices Were Sent Not Located.

Nearly a third of the letters sent out the second week of September, by County Treasurer Weaver which contained a statement of the 1913 uncollected tax to property owners of Charlevoix county and city, who are still in arrears for that year, are being returned to him through the post office, the authorities not being able to locate the people to whom the letters were addressed. He finds that for that year there is still due from the city of Charlevoix, $1,618.12, with fees added amounting to $647.25 more. There are 175 descriptions in the list, and the amounts due from the delinquents run as high as over $116; with a general average for the entire number of near $30.

Under the law the state adds one dollar to the amount due on a returned description 18 months after it has been returned to the county as uncollected. This takes effect October 1, but from March 1, 1914, a fee of one per cent per month interest was added each month.

WANT ANOTHER COURSE

Movement on Foot for Greater Golf Facilities for Charlevoix.

The following clipped from the Grand Rapids Herald, gives publicity to a movement which has been on foot here for some weeks. It was the opinion of those directly interested that it would be for the best to keep the matter quiet for the present, until matters had shaped themselves. However, the matter has become public, although nothing definite as yet will be given out by those promoting the project.

"A movement is on foot for greater golf facilities in this city. It has been known for the past several seasons that the north side golf links were inadequate to meet the demands on them. Although it is a conceded fact that these are the best links in the state and one of the best in the country, there is complaint that they are crowded to an extent that handicaps the patrons.

In view of this fact it is thought that another field for this great sport should be provided. The movement has reached a stage where options are being secured. The territory contemplated is that in the vicinity of Brookside cemetery, where all topographical conditions are particularly favorable."

DEATH ENDS HIS SUFFERING

Leigh Gilbert Passes Away Tuesday Morning at 10:15.

Confined to Bed About Ten Days—Leakage of the Heart Cause of Death.

Tuesday morning at 10:15 Leigh Gilbert died at his home on Garfield avenue after being confined to his bed only ten days. The cause of death was leakage of the heart.

Mr. Gilbert was born in East Jordan November 5, 1890, and was 24 years of age at the time of his death. He was married to Anna J. Alcock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Archie Alcock, four years ago, having made Charlevoix his home since that time.

This spring Mr. Gilbert and Merritt Miller formed a partnership in painting and were busily engaged in their work until about two weeks ago, when Mr. Gilbert was compelled to retire from work.

Deceased is survived by his wife, his father, William Gilbert, a brother, Fred Gilbert and sister, Mrs. Vernon Payton, all of Traverse City; also his step-mother and a half brother and half-sister, William and Mamie Gilbert of Traverse City. Mr. Gilbert's mother died at East Jordan when he was but three years of age. His father and step-mother had been here about a week and left Tuesday morning for Traverse City. Their son died just two hours after they had left his bedside. Mr. Gilbert was an ambitious young man of pleasant personality and numbered his friends by his many acquaintances. His early death is a crushing blow to the many friends who saw only the brightest prospects for his future. The funeral will be held from the

TOOK HER BY SURPRISE

Friends Help Mrs. L. B. Bartlett Celebrate Her 53rd Birthday.

A large number of the intimate friends of Mrs. L. B. Bartlett met at the home of F. A. Butler, on Saturday evening last, and when all were present, went to the home of Mrs. Bartlett, the object being to remind her of her fifty-third birthday and help celebrate it in an appropriate manner.

Prior to the crowd taking her home by storm, Mrs. Bartlett was taken for an auto ride and did not reach home until the "bunch" were there. Upon entering the house, the surprise was complete, and it was some time before she could realize what had occurred.

Leaders of the party proceeded to take charge of the dining room and a fine pot luck supper was soon in readiness, to which all did justice.

The evening was spent in playing games and initiating new members into the "Clothes-pin Club." The stunts pulled off on the unsuspecting guests were very amusing, both to the victim and the assembled guests.

However, the real object of the event was to present Mrs. Bartlett with a memento of the occasion, showing in a manner the high esteem in which she is held by her host of friends. The token was a fine ivory bracelet, presented in behalf of the guests by F. V. Alexander. The second surprise to the hostess was greatly appreciated, not only for its value, but for the spirit and good will which accompanied it.

REID-CLARKE

Prominent Charlevoix Girl Married at Home of Parents Tuesday Afternoon.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Clark of Norwood township was the scene of a pretty home wedding Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, when their daughter, Mary Isabel became the wife of Mr. Ronald A. Reid of Detroit, Rev. Reed of Norwood officiating.

Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were present at the ceremony. The bride is well known in Charlevoix and vicinity having attended the Charlevoix public schools and also spent practically all her life here. She has a host of friends who extend happy congratulations. The groom is a resident of Detroit.

Mr. and Mrs. Reid left Wednesday morning for their future home in Detroit.

Cashes First Rat Order.

J. A. Ketoskey, a resident of North Bay, was the first man in Charlevoix county to get five cents per head bounty on rats in Charlevoix county. Monday he presented an order to County Treasurer for 25 heads, which under the new law entitled him to $1.25.

HOOKE & SON TO RE-BUILD

Present Quarters Too Small For Rapidly Increasing Business.

Old Livery Barn to Be Displaced With Fine Concrete and Iron Structure.

Work has commenced on the construction new additions to Hooker & Son's garage and livery establishment on Antrim street, which when completed, will more than double the present floor space.

A gang of workmen are now tearing down the parts of the old building which are to be removed to make room for the new additions. The extension will be some 50 feet running west toward State street and will extend south 100 feet from Antrim street, and will be one story in height.

Back of this extension another will be erected two stories high, with a State street frontage of 64 feet and extending east 100 feet. The Antrim street frontage back 100 feet will be practically an enlargement of the garage, the rear extension to be devoted to the livery, with storage space above.

The new additions will be constructed of concrete and iron, thus making it as near fire-proof as possible. The living quarters of Mr. Hooker and family will be in a number of well appointed rooms over the present garage, facing Antrim street. A. J. Gordon of Elyart was awarded the contract for the erection of the new additions.

Since starting in business in the present quarters the firm of Hooker & Son has met with success which has resulted in increasing the size of their present quarters. When the new additions are completed, there will be no better garage and livery in northern Michigan.

THE WEATHER

Weather forecast for the week beginning Wednesday, Sept. 22, issued by U. S. Weather Bureau, Washington, D. C., for Great Lakes district:

Fair and cool weather the first half of the week with probability of heavy frost Wednesday and Thursday; the latter half of the week will be warmer and unsettled with probably occasional showers.

Hunting This Year a More Costly Sport

Inexorable Law of Supply and Demand—Makes Pastimes More Expensive—War Boosts Prices.

The inexorable law of supply and demand has made hunting a more expensive pastime than ever before this year.

European battlefields have demanded great quantities of rifles and ammunition. The United States has been kept busy satisfying a part at least of this demand. Hence the price of guns and cartridges have gone up.

Practically every item on the list of hunting armament has gone up, and the prices for rifles and shotguns are about ten per cent higher than the prevailing prices of a year ago.

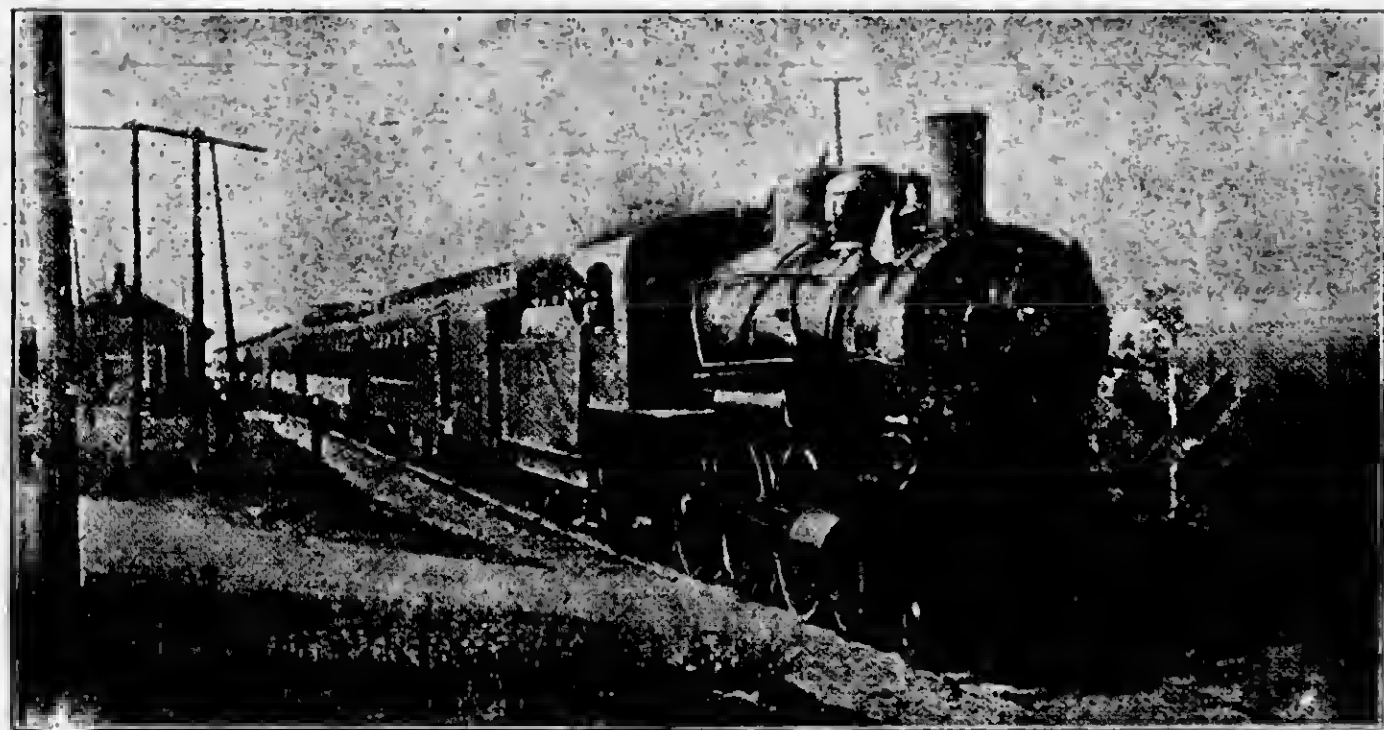

Among the high power rifles the rise has been even more marked and a second increase of ten per cent in price was recently ordered on the standard 30-30.

Rifle shells have also increased in price and shotgun shells have also taken a sympathetic upward movement, although to a lesser degree, those in local stores which sold last year for $6.50 being $7.00 a box this year, and other grades are corresponding in price, some being six cents more a box.

However, there are at least 125 hunters in Charlevoix county who are not worried over the increased cost of shooting for that number have secured gun licenses from County Clerk Richard Lewis.

Many hunters have already begun to take their dogs into the woods to train them for the opening of the bird season on October 1. They may do this, but they must not kill partridges in the course of training the eagles—if they do and are caught they will find that the cost of hunting this year has taken another sudden jump upward.

Grand Rapids Wholesalers Coming to Charlevoix 100 Strong

On Tuesday morning, October 5th, the Tenth Annual Trade Extension Tour of the wholesale department of the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce will leave Grand Rapids 100 strong, representatives of 60 or more of the leading business houses, and bringing with the famous Furniture City Band.

The train will be the finest that ever stopped at this station and has been christened by the wholesalers as "West Michigan Special," composed of eight coaches, solid vestibule, electric lights throughout. There will be a combination baggage and smoker car, two of the finest Pere Marquette dining cars, a standard Pullman sleeper for the band boys and newspaper men, four Pullman compartment cars, the last coach on the train being an observation car. The members of the party eat and sleep on the train while on this trip. Each two members are furnished with a private compartment with washstand, toilet and running water in each compartment. In fact the accommodations are as complete as can be had in any first class hotel in a large city. While the train is stopping at this station our citizens will be given an opportunity of inspecting this palace on wheels.

This is the tenth annual trip made by these wholesalers, who are interested in the development of Western Michigan, road building especially and some of the most important subjects of mutual interest to all of us. This is a gala week for those men and they come for a good time, to get acquainted and see the country. They are bringing the famous Furniture City Band and during their stop here this band will play some of their favorite selections for our citizens. The wholesalers are always loaded with advertising souvenirs, such as the kiddies will want, tin whistles, puzzles, pictures, caps, perfumery, etc., and special souvenirs for the ladies and gentlemen. One of the shoe manufacturers of Grand Rapids is having the retail dealer in each town, where the special train stops, give out numbers and upon the arrival of the wholesalers, the person holding the number which corresponds with the number worn by this manufacturer will get a pair of shoes. You are assured of a good time and good entertainment by these men.

This special Pullman train will cover on the trip 652 miles, stopping at 51 towns in the four days and four nights away from Grand Rapids. The firms represented on this tour did about $40,000,000 worth of business during the year 1914. Grand Rapids business men are proud of their city, of their country and are just as interested in the development of our town and Western Michigan as men could be and with a broad policy of development, and protection for West Michigan interests are ever ready to co-operate.

The train will arrive at Charlevoix on October 8th, at 5:00 p. m. leaving at 10:00 p. m. The big Pullman train will be at the Pere Marquette depot where our citizens will meet the wholesalers.

QUESTION CLEARED UP

Charlevoix Readers Can No Longer Doubt the Evidence.

Again and again we have read of strangers in distant towns who have been cured by this, or that medicine. But Charlevoix's pertinent question has always been "Has anyone here in Charlevoix been cured?" The word of a stranger living a hundred miles away may be true, but it cannot have the same weight with us as the word of our own citizens, whom we know and respect, and whose evidence we can so easily prove.

Bert Beaudoin, 328 Bridge Street, Charlevoix, says: "I was bothered off and on for several months by my kidneys. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and I suffered from severe backaches and pains in my loins. I used a box of Doan's Kidney Pills, obtained at the Ivy Drug Store, and they brought fine results. I am now free from the aches and pains and my kidneys are normal."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Beaudoin had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

School Notes

COUNTY NORMAL.

(Hazel Richardson.)

Word has been received from Ethel Sanford, graduate of last years class. She is teaching at Goodhart and has a school of fifteen pupils.

Marie Lamiman, graduate of the class of 1915, has taken up her work as teacher in the Antrim City school. She has an enrollment of ten pupils.

Miss May L. Stewart, county school commissioner, visited the Normal last Wednesday and spoke to the class on the benefit of normal training to rural teachers.

Fred Gregory and Ward Genett visited the Normal one day last week. They gave very interesting talks on the work they expect to do this year at college and the work they did here last year in the boy scout movement.

The work of the class for the present consists of a teacher's review course of the common branches and school management. Last Friday in elementary agriculture specimens of many of the common weeds were gathered from the school grounds. The class enjoyed the work of distinguishing between them and learning their names and different characteristics.

ANKLE WATCHES TO BE NEW FAD

Girls Will Also Wear Skirts Nine Inches From Ground.

BUT HATS WILL BE HIGHER

And to Be Perfectly Stylish One Must Wear a Hand Painted Pigeon on the Wrist—It's to Be a Wonderful Winter When It Comes to Clothes, So Get Prepared.

Shorter skirts will be worn this fall and winter, girls. Nine inches from the ground they'll be and daring wide at the bottom. High shoes laced in many ways will be in vogue, with ankle watches strapped around the shoe tops. Wristlets will be extremely tight and will button in front, and—well, there's so much of this let's proceed in orderly fashion.

Coats? Yes; they will be worn. They will date back to 1830, being very full, with big pockets, fur collars and circular collars. The collars will come up to the tip of the wearer's nose. These fashions were brought in by a score of buyers who arrived recently from France.

Decollete will be the same as usual, only more so, and mostly V shaped. Some of those gowns certainly do look very, very low! And here's another thing: Correct evening dress demands the butterfly cape. You know the kind—buttons or loops or something like that over the shoulders, so that when you spin around quickly you appear to be sprouting wings.

See Those Hats Shoot Up!

Hats are coming back into style again. You remember, they rather went out of fashion this year, and all the women were wearing no crowns, just sort of half hats. But they will have crowns, brims and everything else this fall and winter, only the crowns will be much higher and the brims far smaller.

Violet will be the predominating color. Make a note of that, so no wily dressmaker will deceive you by trying to sell you a white evening gown. To be harmonious to the up power on this violet color scheme it is rumored that violet colored cocktails may even become palatable.

Goodness! We almost forgot about the hand painted pigeons! One milliner brought back eleven beautiful birds, which he obtained from the Church of St. Francis in Lausanne, Switzerland. He says he is only going to keep the birds in his conservatory, but the report persists that the days of fifteen carrying pigeons to be revived and that the well-to-do and fashionable woman must carry about a hand painted pigeon strapped to her wrist.

Macaws Will Get Jealous. And these are some pigeonst: Red, yellow, green and blue are a few of them; violet, yellow and red are others; some are brown and green, and still others are claret and blue. Furthermore, the color will not wash off in the rain.

Short, nine inch from the ground skirts, high shoes, with ankle watches; tight waists, high crowned and small trimmed hats, and a hand colored pigeon on the wrist! It will be a wonderful fall and winter, boys and girls, most wonderful!

TREE VALUED AT $30,000.

Alligator Pear Variety Insured For Record Amount in London.

An alligator pear tree has been insured by Lloyds for $30,000. This makes an American tree, situated in Los Angeles county, Cal., the most valuable tree in the world, even outstripping the centuries old date palms of Arabia. Through the enterprise of Lloyds of London this tree is insured against damage by wind or rain.

This unusual tree grows on a fruit ranch in Whittier, Cal. Last year it produced 3,000 pears, which brought the owner an average of 50 cents each. Besides the pears, which are used extensively for salads, the owner received $1,500 for the hard wood. The total amount brought by the tree last year was $3,000, which is equivalent to the interest (at 5 per cent) on a $60,000 investment.

Not only is the tree valuable in its production of fruit and hard wood, but valuable byproducts can be taken from the fruit, allowing no waste in the event of overripeness or spoilage. The seed is used for the making of black dye, and any fruit unfit for market purposes can be squeezed and the oil expressed. It is used for the finer grades of soap and in rare perfumed oils for lighting.

"Isn't that statement correct?" asked the editor.

PEG O' MY HEART

By J. Hartley Manners

A Comedy of Youth Founded by Mr. Manners on His Great Play of the Same Title—Illustrations From Photographs of the Play

Copyright, 1913, by Dodd, Mead & Company

SYNOPSIS.

Frank O'Connell, young Irish patriot, is shot and wounded by British soldiers while making a home rule speech. He is aided by Angela Kingsnorth, an English society girl, who defends him.

Angela takes O'Connell to her brother's home and helps to nurse him. He recovers, and he and the girl become fast friends. O'Connell when well is sent to jail for disturbing the peace. He finally escapes Angela that he has finished his sentence.

O'Connell and Angela wed. She has espoused the Irish cause. Her brother, a member of parliament, is very angry.

The happy couple come to America to live. A daughter is born to them. Angela's brother refuses to help the couple in any way. Angela dies.

O'Connell names his daughter Margaret and calls her "Peg." O'Connell receives a most important letter from England, which perplexes him.

O'Connell allows Peg to visit England at her uncle's request. The elder Kingsnorth's heart had finally softened toward his dead sister's little girl.

Peg goes to the home of the Chichester family in England at the direction of Mr. Hawkes, Kingsnorth's attorney, as Kingsnorth suddenly dies.

She first meets Ethel Chichester and Brent, a married man in love with Ethel. She interrupts them by accident to a secret meeting.

Ethel is enraged at Peg and haughtily dismisses her from the drawing room, sending her to the servants' quarters. The Chichesters have lost their money in a bank failure.

Hawkes arrives and reads the Kingsnorth will. It leaves most of the fortune to Peg and offers liberal pay to any one who will undertake her education and social training.

Mrs. Chichester finally agrees to bring up Peg in return for the money promised, although she openly despises the shabby young girl.

Peg is heartbroken at the cold reception given her by the Chichester family. She is much impressed, however, by the luxury of her surroundings.

Peg meets Jerry Adair, who takes a lively interest in her. She finds in him a real friend. She tells him about her father. He is a farmer, he says.

Peg decides to return home, but on Jerry's plea she decides to remain in England a month. Brent and Ethel have another meeting. Both are unhappy.

Ethel and Peg have a violent disagreement, and Brent's attentions to the former are the cause of the dispute, which is interrupted by Jerry.

Jerry takes Peg to a fashionable dance without Mrs. Chichester's knowledge. Peg meets Ethel in a mad escapade with Brent.

Peg prevents Ethel from eloping with Brent, but falls downstairs at midnight, alarming the house. Mrs. Chichester abuses Peg for going to the dance.

Mrs. Chichester endeavors to persuade Alario to propose marriage to Peg in order to keep the girl's fortune in the poverty stricken family. Peg refuses him.

CHAPTER XXV.

Peg's Father.

ONE night a flag at the bell caused O'Connell to look up frowningly. He was not in the habit of receiving calls. Few people ever dared to intrude on his privacy.

He opened the door and looked in amazement at his visitor. He saw a little, round, merry looking, baldheaded gentleman with gold rimmed spectacles, an enormous silk hat, broadcloth frock coat suit, patent boots with gray spurs on them and a general air of prosperity and good nature.

"Is that Frank O'Connell?" cried the little man.

"It is," said O'Connell, trying in vain to see the man's features distinctly in the dim light.

The little man came into the room, took off his heavy silk hat and looked up at O'Connell with a quizzing look in his laughing eyes.

"McGinnis!"

"That's who it is! Talkative McGinnis, come all the way from old Ireland to take ye by the hand."

The two men shook hands warmly.

"An' what in the world brings ye here, docthor?" asked O'Connell.

"Didn't ye hear of me old grand-uncle McNamara of County Sligo dyin'—after a useless life—and doin' the only thing that made me proud of him aow that he's gone—may he slape in pence—invin' the money he'd kept satch a close flat on all his life to his God-fearin' nephew so that he can spend the rest of his days in comfort? Didn't ye hear that?"

"I did not. And who was the nephew that came into it?"

"Meself, Frank O'Connell!"

"Yuu! Is it the truth ye're tellin' me?"

"May I never smike another wurr'd if I'm not."

O'Connell took the little man's hand and shook it until the doctor screamed out to him to let it go.

"It's sorry I am if I hurt ye. So it's a wealthy man ye are now, docthor, eh?"

"Middlin' wealthy."

"And what are ye doin' in New York?"

"Sure, this is the country to take money to. It doubles itself out here overnight, they tell me."

He paused, then continued:

"I hope ye've not lost the gift of the gab. I've ye got it with ye still, Frank O'Connell?"

The shock had come. His mother's terrible alternative was now before him in all its naked horror. A shiver ran through him. The thought of a man with a future as brilliant as his being blighted at the outset by such a misalliance!

He felt the color leave his face.

"Engaged! Don't, mother, please." He trembled again. "Heaven's-engage to that tomboy!"

There was no escape. Mrs. Chichester held him firmly.

"She will have £5,000 a year when she is twenty-one—£5,000 a year—£5,000 of the very best!"

She took him in her arms and pressed his reluctant and shrinking body to her breast. "Think what it would mean, dear—your family preserved and a brand snatched from the burning!"

"That's just it. It's all right saving the family. Aay cove'll do that at a pinch. But I do not see myself as a 'brand snatcher.' Besides, I am not altogether at liberty."

"What?" cried his mother.

"Oh, I've not committed myself to anything. But I've been three times to hear that wonderful woman speak—once on the platform! And people are beginning to talk. She thinks so end of me. Sent me a whole lot of stuff last week—'advanced literature' she calls it. I've got 'em all upstairs. Wrote every word of 'em herself. Never saw a woman who can talk and write as she can. And outside of all that I'm afraid I've more or less encouraged her. And there you are—the whole thing in a nutshell."

Alario thought for a few moments.

The result of this mental activity took form and substance as follows:

"She is not half bad looking—at times—when she's properly dressed."

"I've seen her look almost beautiful!" cried Mrs. Chichester.

Alario suddenly grew depressed.

"Shocking temper, mother!" he shook his head despondently.

"The woman who loves always obeys!" cried his mother.

"Ah, there we have it!" And Alario sprang up and faced the old lady.

"There we have it! Does she love me?" Mrs. Chichester looked fondly at her only son and answered:

"How could she be near you for the last month and not love you?"

Alario nodded.

"Of course there is that. Now, let me see—just get a solid grip on the whole thing. If she loves me and taking all things into consideration—for your sake and darling Ethel's—and for my—that is—"

As mother and son walked slowly toward the house they looked up, and gazing through a tiny casement of the little mauve room was Peg, her face white and drawn.

Peg decided to take a walk in the garden. As she reached the foot of the stairs Alario came in quickly through the windows.

"Hello, Margaret!" he cried cheerfully, though his heart was beating nervously at the thought of what he was about to do, and across his features there was a sickly pallor.

"What have you got there, all tucked away?" he ventured on the opening question that was to lead to the all important one.

"I've held up a book for him to see. The only thing I'm takin' away that I didn't bring with me."

"A book, eh?"

"That's what it is—a book," and she began to go upstairs.

"Taking it away?" he called up to her.

"That's what I'm doin'," and she still went on up two more steps.

"You're not really going away—cos, is it?" he gasped.

"I am," replied Peg.

"Just a moment," he cried, stopping her just by an oriel window. She paused in the center of the glow that radiated from his panes.

"What is it?" she asked impatiently. She wanted to go back to her room and make her final preparations.

Alario looked at her with what he meant to be adoration in his eyes.

"Do you know I've grown really awfully fond of you?" His voice quivered and broke. He had reached one of the crises of his life.

"No, I didn't know it. When did ye find it out?"

"Just now—down in that room—when the thought flashed through me that perhaps you really meant to leave us. It went all through me. 'Twas my honor it did. The idea positively hurt me—really hurt me."

"Did it, now?" laughed Peg. "Sure an' I'm glad of it."

"Glad? Glad?" he asked in astonished meat.

"I am. I didn't think anything could hurt ye unless it disturbed yer comfort. An' I don't see how my goin' will do that."

"Oh, but it will," persisted Alario. "Really it will."

"Sure now?" Peg was growing really curious. What was this odd little fellow trying to tell her?

Alario felt that the moment had now really come.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Alario, Peg and Mr. Hawkes.

"COUSIN," said Alario to Peg, and his voice dropped to the caressing note of a wooer.

"Cousin, do you know, I am going to do something now I've never done before?"

He paused to let the full force of what was to come have its real value.

"What is it, Alario?" Peg asked, all unconscious of the drama that was taking place in her cousin's heart.

"Sure, what is it? Ye're not goin' to do something useful, are ye?"

He braced himself and went on: "I am going to ask a very charming young lady to marry me. Eh?"

"I am?"

"What do ye think of that, now?"

"And—who—do—ye—think—it—is?"

He waited, wondering if she would guess correctly. It would be as helpful if only she could.

But she was so unexpected. "I couldn't guess it in a hundred years, Alario—rarely I couldn't."

"Oh, try! Do try!" he argued.

"I couldn't think who'd marry you—lad—no! I couldn't. Maybe the poor girl's blind. Is that it?"

"Can't you guess? No? Really?"

"No, I'm tellin' ye. Who in it?"

"You!"

Then she leaned back against the balustrade and laughed long and unrestrainedly. She laughed until the tears came coursing down her cheeks.

Alario was at first nonplused. Then he grasped the situation in its full significance. It was just a touch of hysteria. He joined her and laughed heartily as well.

"Alario!" he cried between laughs. "That's a splendid sign. Splendid! I've always been told that girls cry when they're proposed to."

"Sure, that's what I'm doin'," gasped Peg. "I'm cryin'—laughin'! Sure, I think I'd rather have Michael; my terrier—if you don't mind."

He started forward. "Oh, come, I say! You don't mean that! Think—just for one moment—of the advantages!"

"If ye don't mind," replied Peg weekly.

To her amazement the gloom lifted from her cousin's countenance. He took a deep breath, looked at her in genuine relief and cried out heartily:

"I say! You're a bricket! It's really awfully good of you. Some girls in your position would have jumped at me—positively jumped! But you—why, you're a genuine little ball marked A1 bricket! I'm extremely obliged to you."

He took her little hand and shook it warmly.

"You're a plucky little girl, that's what you are—a plucky—little—girl. I'll never forget it—never. If there is anything I can do—at any time—anywhere—all on me. I'll be there—right

SECRETARY Garrison has hitherto been recognized as one of the two strong men in the cabinet. The secretary is in danger of losing this reputation.

Whether the call of the wild democrats in New Jersey who want Garrison to run for governor has turned the secretary's head or whether the dire necessities of the chief are the moving cause, may not be stated with positiveness. But the fact remains that, for some reason or other, Mr. Garrison has laid aside the atmosphere of efficient silence in which he has heretofore been doing his work and now bursts into print with absurd and petulant criticism of all who venture to express an opinion contrary to that held by the administration.

His rebuke of General Leonard Wood for Roosevelt's speech at Plattsburg is a case in point. And more recently has come another in a published rejoinder to a letter from the American Defence League in which the league accused the Wilson administration of opposing practical efforts to put the nation in a state of military preparedness. This letter, Secretary Garrison says, "quite obviously was prepared and published to cause me embarrassment." If that is the result of the letter, it is only because the secretary has put himself in a position to be embarrassed by it.

The fact is that the administration has set back the programme of preparedness for more than a year. The president himself discouraged any discussion of the topic at the last session of congress, and, at a time when there was pending before the senate a proposal for the construction of an adequate under-sea flotilla, he insisted upon wasting six weeks of the senate's time in a vain attempt to pass the iniquitous ship-purchase bill.

It is no wonder that the administration is sensitive on this point, and the secretary's letters and interviews contribute largely to the general belief that the accusations of neglect are well founded. The president himself has also joined the lists and has made public the letters which he wrote to the war and navy departments last July. In these letters he tells of the quantity of thought which he has devoted to the subject of preparedness. But in December last he told congress that national defence had not been neglected and that the country had been misinformed.

The fact is that he has not departed from the position he took last December and the democratic leaders in congress have not departed from it. Senator Kern of Indiana, majority leader in the upper house, and Mr. Kitchin, of North Carolina, who holds an analogous post in the lower branch, have lately come out in opposition to any adequate increase in either the army or the navy. The democratic flock will largely follow these bellwethers--and the president will be well content. A brief respite from the tension which has existed with Germany serves to turn the democratic mind to ship-purchase legislation and to pork-barrels. If anything is to be accomplished for national defence next winter it will be by the sturdy advocacy of republican senators and representatives, with the aid of a few democrats who do not echo the thoughts of "Olympian superiority" which emanate from the white house. At present it is plainly evident that the only kind of defence which interests the administration is the defence of the democratic party.

The nepotism practised by the federal administration seems to be contagious so far as democratic state administrators are concerned. In Missouri a careful census is being prepared of the number of relatives of state officers that have been put on the pay roll. The governor has named his son, his brother, his cousin and a niece of his wife to public positions. The secretary of state has taken care of two daughters and a sister-in-law. The auditor has decided that the public good imperatively requires that his wife, his daughter-in-law and brother-in-law of his son be given official positions. The list is still in its infancy, with other department to be investigated.

"Did you ever notice," said one of our local merchants the other day, "that the business man, who fails to keep the lights burning in his front windows at night is just the one who howls the loudest because the town ain't alive?"

The minister's wife was busily engaged one afternoon mending the family clothes when a neighbor called for a friendly chat. After a few moments of news and gossip the caller remarked, as she began to inspect a basket of miscellaneous buttons, "You seem to be unusually well supplied with buttons of all kinds. Why, there's one like my husband had on his last winter's suit." "Indeed," said the minister's wife, with a slight smile. "Well, all these buttons were found in the contribution box, and I thought I might make use of some of them. What! Must you go? Well, good bye. Come again soon."

A young man engaged board and lodging in a private family who were extremely devout. Before each meal a long grace was said. To their dismay and horror the new boarder sat bolt upright while the others at table reverently bowed their heads. When the second day passed and the young man evinced no disposition to unbend, the good lady of the house could endure the situation no longer. "Atheism?" asked she sharply. "No, Madam," humbly responded the new boarder; "boil."

Jack London, the author, was introduced one day to a musician. "I, too, am a musician in a small way," London said. "My musical talent was once the means of saving my life." "How was that?" the musician asked. "There was a great flood in our town in my boyhood," replied London. "When the water struck our house my father got a bed and floated with the stream until he was rescued." "And you?" asked the musician. "Well," said London, "I accompanied him on the piano."

One day, after the brakeman had been pointing out the window and explaining the scenery, says the Denver News, one of the passengers whispered to the conductor: "Conductor, can you tell me how that brakeman lost his finger? He seems to be a very nice fellow. It seems a pity that he should be crippled." "That's just it, ma'am. He is a good fellow. He is so obliging that he just wore his finger off pointing out the scenery along the line."

A western business man, visiting the city of Washington with a young son, took him to the Senate gallery one afternoon. A certain venerable gentleman, whose part in the exercises seemed not especially clear to the lad, interested him greatly. The father explained that this elderly person was the chaplain of the Senate. "Oh, he prays for the Senate, does he?" asked the boy. "No," said the father, "he gets up and takes a look at the Senate, and then prays for the country."

Death came at the close of Tuesday afternoon to Alexander Cameron at his home on Mason street. Mr. Cameron had been in poor health for the past year, but was not confined to his bed until a week ago. For the past five days he hovered nearer death than life, until his suffering came to an end Tuesday evening.

Alexander Cameron was born December 13, 1852, and came to Charlevoix from Ontario in 1881. From this time until poor health compelled him to retire, he followed the business of contracting and building, being one of the known contractors in the city.

Deceased was a member of the local order of Maccabees, and is survived by a wife and one son, Arba, located at Minneapolis, Minnesota. Funeral services will be held from the home Thursday afternoon at 2:00, Rev. Quinton Walker officiating. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

A hawk can spy a jark upon earth almost exactly the same color at twenty times the distance at which it is perceptible to a man or a dog. MOST SUCCESSFUL CROOK IS CAUGHT Bank Director Jekyll and Hyde Worth Nearly a Million.

SWINDLED FORTY-SIX YEARS

Held at Last After Being Arrested Three Times Before—Never Went After Small Amounts, and His Hauls Were Always Large—System Explained by Detectives.

Detectives who had been searching for sixteen years for John W. Barnhardt declare that in his arrest in St. Louis they captured the most daring, successful criminal in the United States. How many names he operated under is yet to be determined; but, according to the police, he has confessed being guilty of fraudulent acts for forty-six years in every large city of the country.

His profits are said to have made him almost a millionaire. Only three times before in his career has he been arrested—in Kansas City, Denver and Waukegan, Wis.

His life has not been one of dodging and hiding from officers of the law, but rather a Jekyll and Hyde existence. For two years he had lived in a splendid home in Forest City, Ark., to which he returned periodically with thousands of dollars, which he placed in his bank. He was a leading citizen and director of the largest bank, and his family was prominent socially. He had been urged to become a candidate for the state senate.

According to the police, the thousands he brought home were obtained by loans on fraudulent deeds, which is alleged to have been his specialty for twenty years. As John W. Kline he is said to have gone to Kansas City in 1889, represented himself as a man of means and obtained a loan of $10,000 on a bogus deed. He was arrested and sentenced for two years.

His System Explained. Barnhardt's system of working, as explained by detectives, is simple. Aided by his appearance and a show of ready money, he sought out owners of valuable real estate on the pretext he intended to buy the property. He stated that he wished to invest the title he would obtain the warranty deed. Then clever forgeries of the document would be made, and Barnhardt would appear in some form by community and negotiate a loan, always a large one.

Barnhardt escaped from jail in Waukegan, Wis., recently, the police say.

Dispatches from Council Bluffs, Ia., Kansas City, Mo.; Waukegan, Wis., Kalamazoo, Mich., and Quincy and Danville, Ill., indicate that a man believed to be Barnhardt had been involved in real estate swindling operations in or near those cities.

AEROPLANE'S LIFE 100 HOURS

Statistics Show That Each Machine Lasts Little More Than Four Days.

Albert B. Lambert, millionaire aviator and organizer of the aerial reserve of the United States, in a speech said: "Statistics from the front prove that the life of an aeroplane in war averages about 100 hours, or a little more than four days. On the French front there are about 1,500 aeroplanes, and on the British front there are about 1,000, making altogether 2,500 aeroplanes attached to the forces of the allies on the western battle line. It is calculated that it would require 7,500 of these aerial scouts to do constant duty at all points along the allies' lines. England and France are capable of turning out about 1,000 machines a week apiece. Compared with this the United States, including all its public and private resources, can build only about 300 or 400 aeroplanes weekly. "Until we put our aeroplane service upon an adequate basis and provide for factories capable of turning out three or four times as many machines as it is possible at present, our army and navy will go into battle blind and predestined to certain defeat."

PIPES FOR THE OLD WOMEN

An Up to Date Smoking Room Also at Modern Peer Farm.

A silent little group of gray haired women, some of them great-grandmothers, resting easily in comfortable rocking chairs with thin blue ribbons of smoke rising from their meerschaum and corncob pipes, will be part of the "modernism" at the new $150,000 women's building, now in process of completion at the Hamsey county poor farm, St. Paul.

For the old women are to have an elaborate smoking room, fitted in modern style, and, said Mrs. Albert Moore, wife of the farm superintendent: "If the dear old souls want the walls covered with pictures of race horses, prize fighters and baseball players, they may have them. When we took a poll of the old ladies regarding the establishment of a den for smoking," she continued, "there was hardly a dissenting voice. We shall furnish the tobacco, and we expect the 'smoker' to be one of the most popular places of the institution."

COLLEGE COURSE FOR POLICE

Berkeley Force Requested to Make Study of Criminology.

Policemen of Berkeley, Cal., have been requested to attend the University of California. This is believed to be the first time any city in the world has made preparations to have a "college" for police.

The course of study is in the relation of mental disease to criminology. The theory is that the policeman will be enabled to "size up" a man arrested for a crime and ascertain just what other offenses against the law he may have committed.

IRON COINS FOR GERMANY.

Nickel Not to Be Used in New Five Pfennig Pieces.

The bundsrath has passed a law providing for the coinage of iron five pfennig pieces (1 1/4 cents), says a Berlin dispatch.

The demand for five pfennig pieces is great, especially because quantities are in circulation in the hostile territory occupied by Germany, and more are needed. Under present circumstances, however, the use of nickel for coinage is held to be inadvisable.

on the spot.

"Bless you, cousin. You've taken an awful load off my mind. I was really worried. I had to ask you. Promised to. See you before you go!"

On the 30th day of June Mr. Montgomery Hawkes glanced at his appointments for the following day and found this entry, "Mrs. Chichester, Scarborough-In re Margaret O'Connell."

He accordingly sent a telegram to Mrs. Chichester, acquainting her with the pleasant news that she might expect that distinguished lawyer on July 1 to render an account of her stewardship of the Irish agitator's child.

He was shown into the music room and was admiring a genuine Greuze when Mrs. Chichester came in.

She greeted him tragically and motioned him to a seat beside her.

"Well?" he smiled cheerfully. "And how is our little protégée?"

"Sitting down," replied Mrs. Chichester somberly.

"Thank you."

He sat beside her, waited a moment, then, with some sense of misgiving, asked, "Everything going well, I hope?"

"Far from it." And Mrs. Chichester shook her head sadly. "She wants to leave us today. She has ordered a cab. She is packing now."

"Dear, dear!" ejaculated the bewildered solicitor. "Where is she going?"

"Back to her father."

"How perfectly ridiculous!"

"But don't be uneasy," he replied easily. "My lady will stay. My lady will stay."

Mrs. Chichester rose, crossed over to the bell and rang it.

"There is one thing you must know, Mr. Hawkes. My son is in love with her," she said, in a tone of earnest confidence.

"What? Your son?"

"Yes," she sighed. "Of course she is hardly a suitable match for Alaric—as yet. But by the time she is of age—"

Hawkes was moving restlessly about the room. He stopped in front of Mrs. Chichester as Jarvis disappeared to notify Peg.

"I am afraid, madam, that such a marriage would be out of the question. As one of the executors of the late Mr. Kingsnorth's will, in my opinion, it would be defeating the object of the dead man's legacy."

Mrs. Chichester retorted heatedly: "He deserves her to be trained. What training is better than marriage?"

"Almost any," replied Mr. Hawkes. "Marriage should be the union of two formed characters. Marriage between the young is one of my pet objections. It is a condition of life essentially for those who have reached maturity in nature and in character. I am preparing a paper on it for the Croydon Ethical society and—"

"Whatever else Mr. Hawkes might have said in continuation of another of his pet subjects was cut abruptly short by the appearance of Peg. She was still dressed in one of Mrs. Chichester's gowns. She had not had an opportunity to change into her little traveling suit.

"Well, well," he said, "an improvement," he said.

"I'm glad you've come, Mr. Hawkes."

"Why, you're a young lady!" cried the astonished solicitor.

"Am I? Ask me what you think!" replied Peg somewhat bitterly.

"Now, my dear Miss Margaret O'Connell," began the lawyer.

"Will you let me have £20?" suddenly asked Peg.

"Certainly. Now?" and he took out his pocketbook.

"This minute," replied Peg positively.

"With pleasure," said Mr. Hawkes as he began to count the banknotes.

"And I want you to get a passage on the first ship to America, this afternoon if there's one!" cried Peg earnestly.

"Oh, come, come," remonstrated the lawyer.

"The £20 I want to buy something for me father—just to remember England by. If you think my uncle wouldn't like me to have it because I'm leaving, why, then my father'll pay you back. It may take him a long time, but he'll pay it."

"Now, listen!" interrupted Mr. Hawkes.

"Mebbe it'll only be a few dollars a week, but father always pays his debts—in time. That's all he ever needs—time."

"What's all this nonsense about going away?"

"It isn't nonsense. I'm going to me father," answered Peg resolutely.

Hawkes hunted through his mind for the cause of this upheaval in the Chichester home. He remembered Mrs. Chichester's statement about Alaric's affection for his young cousin. Could the trouble have arisen from that? It gave him a clew to work on. He grasped it.

"Answer me one question truthfully, Miss O'Connell. Is there an affair of the heart?"

Peg looked down on the ground mournfully and replied:

"Me heart is in New York—with me father."

"Has any one made love to you since you have been here?"

Peg looked up at him sadly and shook her head. A moment later a mischievous look came into her eyes, and she said, with a roguish laugh:

"Sure one man wanted to kiss me, an' I boxed his ears, an' another—al-most man—asked me to marry him."

"Oh!" ejaculated the lawyer.

"Me Cousin Alaric."

"And what did you say?" questioned Hawkes.

"I told him I'd rather have Michael."

He looked at her in open bewilderment and repeated:

"Michael?"

"Me dog," explained Peg, and her eyes danced with merriment.

Hawkes laughed heartily and re-plied.

As Hawkes looked at her, radiant in her springlike beauty, her clear, healthy complexion, her dazzling teeth, her red-gold hair, he felt a sudden thrill go through him. His life had been so full, so concentrated on the development of his career, that he had never permitted the feminine note to obtrude itself on his life. His effort had been rewarded by an unusually large circle of influential clients who "Will ya let me have £20?" suddenly asked Peg.

yielded him an exceedingly handsome revenue. He had heard whispers of a mis-try. His public future was as-ured.

But his private life was arid. The handsome villa in Pelham crescent had no one to grace the head of the table, save on the occasional visits of his aged mother or the still rarer ones of a married sister.

And here was he in the full prime of life.

Hawkes was not to be denied now. He went on in his snuffiest and most persuasive accents:

"I know one who would give you all these—a man who has reached the years of discretion, one in whom the follies of youth have merged into the knowledge and reserve of early middle age; a man of position and of means; a man who can protect you, care for you, admire you—and be proud to marry you."

"Miss O'Connell—may I say Mar-garet?"—I was your uncle's adviser, his warm personal friend. We spoke freely of you for many weeks before he died. It was his desire to do some-thing for you that would change your whole life and make it full and happy and contented. Were your uncle alive I know of nothing that would give him greater pleasure than for his old friend to take you, your young life, into his care. Miss O'Connell, I am the man!"

"Stop it!" she cried. "What's the matter with you men this mornin'! Ye'd think I was some great lady the way ye're all offerin' me yer hands an' yer names an' yer influences an' yer diggities. Stop it! Give me that money an' let me go."

Hawkes paused.

"Don't give your answer too hastily. I know it must seem abrupt—one might almost say brutal. But I am alone in the world; you are alone. Neither of us has contracted a regard for any one else. And, in addition to that, there would be no occasion to marry an if you are twenty-one. There?"

Peg suddenly burst into a paroxysm of laughter.

"Am I to consider that a refusal?"

"Ye may. What would I be doin' marryin' the likes of you? Answer me that?"

"That is final!" he queried.

"Absolutely, completely an' entirely final. Thank ye very much, sir," she added. "An' may I have the £20."

"Certainly. Here it is." And he handed her the money.

"I'm much obliged to ye. An' I'm sorry if I hurt ye by laughin' just now. But I thought ye were jokin', I did."

She hurried across the room to the staircase. When she was halfway up the stairs Jarvis entered and was im-mediately followed by Jerry.

"Peg!" he said gently, looking up at her.

"I'm goin' back to me father in half an hour!" And she went on up the stairs.

As Jerry moved slowly away from the staircase he met Montgomery Hawkes.

THEATRICAL

Spectators who will journey with Lyman H. Howe at the Majestic on October 5th through the Panama Canal to the California Expositions will realize, for the first time, what the gigantic constructive work really meant at Panama, how it annihilates distances and links two oceans. The film illustrates one of the greatest gifts to civilization in operation at Panama, and also the climax of man's achievement in celebrating the tremendous event as presented by the expositions both at San Francisco and San Diego. As portrayed by Howe's travel festival, in magnificence and splendor, number of palaces, beauty of grounds and architecture, and in vestness, these expositions are entirely adequate and in the same heroic proportion as the colossal event they celebrate. At the San Francisco Exposition "How Travelers" will gaze upon a city of massed domes, spires, gardens, courts, colonnades, fountains, statuary and imposing edifices which form a "vision splendid" comparable only to fabled cities of the Arabian Nights, or fairylands of awe and gorgeousness. That portion of Mr.

Howe's film covering the San Diego

Exposition reveals the most artistic types of the Spanish-Colonial. Every structure on the grounds is built in this style making the entire exposition hermonious and exquisitely beautiful. The San Diego Exposition portrays primarily the romantic past and the bountiful present, and does it in a peculiarly effective way as transcribed on Howe's films.

Mr. Howe's new program, as usual, will also include many other splendid features widely variegated in character.

One of the best feature films presented in the city this season will be shown at the Majestic Theatre on Friday evening, September 21. The story of "The Hoosier Schoolmaster" has for a foundation one of the deepest and most intensely human themes to be found in the entire field of literature. It tells of the two parties which have forever been battling for social supremacy: the party of the future and the party of the past;

of the new ideas which come end of the old ones which die hard. It is the story of the man who wears a necktie and his neighbor who objects to the custom—an everyday story of plain draw no conclusion as to the cause, the possibility that the crew might have been killed by chlorine gas is indicated in the finding that:

"See water has at times seeped into the cells of the storage batteries of the boats of the F class, causing the evolution of chlorine gas, which is quickly destructive of life."

All in Same Class Alike.

In connection with the following principal findings of the board, it is pointed out that each defective condition reported as to the F-4 obtained in all boats of the class:

"The structure of the hull of the submarine torpedo boat F-4 was regularly inspected, and the condition as to repair and upkeep was excellent, only the most minor corrosion having taken place.

"The propelling engines (Diesel oil type, 4 cycle) have inherent faults and are difficult to keep in repair, but were kept in as high a state of efficiency as was practicable within the limitations of said design.

"This unsatisfactory condition of the propelling engines had no bearing on the loss of the submarine, no being port ed by the time of her loss was being propelled by the electric motors and storage batteries.

"The storage batteries were always in a state of being more or less electrically 'grounded,' due to the leakage of electrolyte, or by capillary action of the electrolyte or moisture and poor insulation, or bad electrical contact, and these said 'grounds' have been noted to be of sufficient intensity at times to cause flame and the fusing of electrical connections.

"This condition is well known to the officers and men of this submarine torpedo boat division, and due care is exercised in attempting to reduce this danger to a minimum.

"The storage batteries during the charging evolved excessive quantities of hydrogen gas, and further, during the early stages of discharging, quantities of hydrogen gas were evolved and the fumes of hydrogen and of acid became noticeable in the interior of the boat on long dives.

"On the F-4, on March 6, 1915, while one electrical ventilator blower was stopped for a short period for minor repairs, probably from a 'ground' in the ventilating blower's electrical circuit, a hydrogen explosion took place which damaged the battery deck and broke several separators of the cells of the storage batteries.

All in Peril of Explosion.

"The conditions under which an explosion of hydrogen is always possible obtain in all the boats of the F class.

"The covering over the storage batteries of the battery deck, in accordance with specifications for submarine torpedo boat No. 23, is to be practically gas tight and water tight, which condition does not obtain, as this so called battery deck does permit water to seep

MUST GO TO SCHOOL

New Law Requires This Even if Children Have Completed Eighth Grade.

Fred L. Keeler, state superintendent of public instruction, says children under 15 years old will have to attend school hereafter, even if they have completed the eighth grade. More than that, the state superintendent declares the present law will have to be enforced.

An act, No. 235, passed by the last legislature, which provides that no labor permit shall be granted to any child under 15 years old except during established vacation periods, permits children of 14 years old or over to work in preserving perishable goods in fruit or vegetable canning establishments.

Now the state has an act in force known as the truancy law, which says that all children shall attend school who are under 15 years until such time as they have completed the eighth grade, when the law permits them to quit school providing they are employed.

Mr. Keeler says there are many children in the state who complete the eighth grade before they are 15 years old, and who have not been compelled to attend school further.

The new law says they cannot be employed and it is up to the children to keep on going to school until they are 15 years old.

TO SEEK BODIES ON LUSITANIA

New Device May Enable Recovery of Lost Gold Also.

INVENTED BY SIMON LAKE.

Apparatus Has Already Passed Experimental Stage and Has Proved Successful—$5,000,000 in Gold on Ship Sunk in 1787 Will Be Sought Also. Called Semisubmersible Tuba.

Simon Lake, inventor of the type of submarine that bears his name, has evolved an apparatus that can recover the valuable cargo of the sunken Lusitania and other vessels destroyed by German submarines. Mr. Lake, at Bridgeport, Conn., said:

"The apparatus already has proved successful and has really passed the experimental stage. I feel confident it will be able to recover cargoes from vessels lying at a depth of 300 feet or less and that it will be able to raise sunken vessels completely where they are lying in water no deeper than 200 feet."

"Already we have constructed a full sized one at Brightlingsea, on the east coast of England, and this one will be used to recover the $5,000,000 of bullion that was lost in the British ship Lutina off the coast of Holland in 1787."

Confident of Success.

"There have been many attempts to secure this valuable cargo, but all have ended in disaster. Our attempt will be made in conjunction with Lloyd's of London. If it is successful, as I believe it will be, there is no reason why it cannot be used to raise the ships sunk in the war zone, or at least to recover their cargoes."

The apparatus is known as the "semi-submersible tube." Mr. Lake describes it as a long tube, five feet in diameter, with a large chamber at one end. The latter is known as the working chamber, and it contains motors, searchlights and other apparatus necessary to control air pressures.

Just above the working chamber is a compartment known as the air lock. It is in this that the operator accustoms himself to the pressure at the particular depth in which he has to work before emerging into the chamber.

In this working chamber is a lens arrangement known as the "aqualung," which enables the operator to look out over the bottom of the ocean and locate the wreck he is searching. The semi-submersible tube is fitted to a special type of wrecking steamer.

Locating the Wreck.

Mr. Lake explains further: "The operator descends into the chamber by means of a stairway built into the tube and, after passing through the air lock, goes into the working chamber. If he then looks through the aqualung while the steamer slowly navigates around."

"As soon as the wreck is located the operator telephones to the captain of the wrecking steamer, and the latter brings his vessel to a stop over the wreck, following the maneuvering directions telephoned to him by the operator. The tube is then lowered on to the deck of the wrecked vessel."

"The working chamber has a door on its under side. The air inside is equal in pressure to that of the water outside, and, as the doors open downward, it is impossible for water to get into the tube."

"When the doors are open the operator, equipped with a diver's outfit, can step on to the deck of the wreck and immediately begin work on recovering the cargo or other things of value. The recovered articles are placed in slings or on hooks and then hoisted to the surface by the derricks on the wrecking steamer."

Carries Electric Lights.

"The operator carries with him a special type of portable electric light which enables him to see his way clearly about the sunken vessel. Crossed lines or cut lines are a constant danger to ordinary divers, but they have no qualms for our operator, because in case of trouble all he has to do is to walk back to the operating chamber."

"According to reports at the time of her sinking the Lusitania is resting in forty fathoms of water—240 feet. If this depth is correct it would be an easy matter to recover the bodies imprisoned beneath her decks as well as her cargo."

For raising sunken steamships, Mr. Lake says, the same apparatus is used, with the exception that it can be operated only in depths up to 200 feet.

The special wrecking steamer devised by Mr. Lake for use with his tube is so arranged that the tube can be used in a heavy sea.

GAS TO KILL MOSQUITOES.

Electric Process to Be Tried in New Jersey.

Electricity will soon be tried by the Union county mosquito extermination commission of Elizabeth, N. J., as a means for doing away with the insects. An electric process by which an insecticide is generated in the form of chlorine gas in solution will be used. This solution will be applied to the soil infested.

The marshes will be surcharged with electric wires attached to carbonized plates and the electricity generated by gasoline engines or motors will cause chlorine gas to rise from the earth and kill the mosquitoes.

PROGRAM OF LECTURE COURSE

Six Most Pleasing Numbers on 1915-16 Program.—Buy Your Tickets Now.

First Number Thursday, October 21—Lecture by Byron W. Kleg—Speaker of Highest Rank.

The Citizens Lecture Course committee have issued their program announcing the entertainments scheduled for the season of 1915-16. As has always been their motto, to give the best course for the money, the program this year reaches the standard of perfection and even more. Six excellent numbers are listed, three lectures and three musical numbers. Each individual attraction is worth at least half of the entire course admission. It is with this excellent program to back their request, that the committee urges each and every citizen to purchase season tickets in advance, thus eliminating the worries that are co-existent with an undertaking of this nature.

The first number of the lecture course will be on Thursday evening, October 1st. Byron W. Kleg, spoken of as a genius, a man of highest rank in his profession, a king of the platform, will deliver one of his eloquent and educational lectures that should appeal to every listener.

The second number of the program occurs on Monday evening, November 15th. The famous Ricardi Fadette will entertain in their delightful musical numbers. This wonderful ladies orchestra is composed of the best personnel of lady musicians on the lyceum platform and each member has a distinguished reputation as a soloist. No stronger musical talent ever reached this city than that collected in this wonderful organization.

The third number on the course will be an illustrated lecture, "The City Beautiful." This lecture will be given on the evening of Tuesday, November 23. Further information will be given on this attraction later.

The fourth number is on Tuesday evening, December 14th, when the Columbian Quartette will present a unique program of musical achievements. Three of the members of this company are blind. They are one of the most remarkable musical organizations in America. For over 20 years the personnel of this company has remained unchanged. It is the oldest quartet and concert party, to the man, on the platform. Their program is very varied and ranges from popular hits to classic numbers.

The fifth attraction of the course will be a lecture by Harry Bowser on Tuesday evening, January 4th. Mr. Bowser, lecturer and humorist, has proved himself one of the greatest successes of the day. His entire time is engaged far in advance of each season, and requests for return engagements are universal. He delivers the goods.

The last number of the program is the famous Carter Jubilee Singers. This organization appears on the evening of March 8th. This company of seven people, always please with their program of old negro melodies, plantation and camp meeting songs of years ago. They are one of the oldest jubilee companies on the road, having organized in 1882 and reorganized in 1892. This record alone merits the highest of recommendations.

With this unparalleled group of entertainments the citizens should be glad to aid in making the course a success this year. The committee is now selling tickets. The season ticket for adults is $1.50, the same as last year, and $1.00 for student season tickets. The charge of ten cents extra will be made for reserved seats for each number. Buy your ticket now and be on hand at the first number and each succeeding one. The benefits derived will be educational as well as amusing.

HARD ASHORE ON GULL ISLAND

Steamer Lackawanna Goes on Reef in Fog Friday Morning.

Was Bound From Chicago to Canadian Port With Cargo of 109,000 Bushels Corn.

The Steamer Lackawanna, bound from Chicago to Canadian ports with a cargo of 109,000 bushels of corn, went ashore off Gull Island reef seven miles west of Beaver Island Friday morning in the heavy fog.

Sunday morning, in response to a message, the crew of the Charlevoix Coast Guard station left this city for the scene of trouble, and found the big freighter hard aground on the reef, full of water with the crew bunched forward, where they had built a fire to keep themselves warm and prepare hot drinks and food.

The crew from this city laid by all day and night, until tug, from St. James and the wrecking outfit came, before they returned to their station here.

The condition of the Lackawanna is reported serious, as all during Saturday night and Sunday the heavy waves pounded her hard from almost every direction. Work of lightering her commenced Monday, and when the crew from this station left, nearly half the cargo of 109,000 bushels of corn had been dumped overboard in an effort to float the ship off the rocks.

The ship may be a total loss, as well as the valuable cargo.

APPLE TRADE PLANS TO SEND FRUIT TO SOLDIERS IN TRENCHES

Big Ship Load of One Hundred Thousand Barrels to be Distributed Free in Hospitals and Trenches Under Auspices of the Red Cross—All Organizations Are Interested.

Every soldier in the trenches and hospitals of Europe will be given an apple in the near future, if plans now being worked out by a committee of the apple trade throughout the United States are successful.

It is proposed to have a vessel take over an entire cargo of apples to be distributed free, under the auspices of the Red Cross, and efforts will be made to get President Wilson and Secretary of State Lansing to have the warring governments arrange for safe passage for the big ship-load to the various fronts and hospitals where the fruit can be placed in the hands of the American Red Cross for distribution, especially among the sick and wounded.

The apple growers and dealers of the United States who are endeavoring to send over this large shipment of 100,000 barrels have learned that many of the fighting men are suffering because of lack of fruit juices, giving rise to scurvy and other disorders. Returning surgeons who have been in service in the European hospitals are said to approve heartily the plan to provide more fruit juices not only among the wounded, but also to the men in the trenches.

"The apple trade and the growers of the country are working on this undertaking purely from humanitarian motives," said one of the committee who is a leading wholesale apple distributor today. "It's going to cost a lot of money for the fruit alone, and we shall call upon all the people engaged in the apple industry to contribute a portion of the expense. At first the trade did not take kindly to the plan, as it was feared that vessels could not be found to carry over the apples. Then the idea was conceived of chartering an apple ship which would carry nothing but apples, and we believe that when the purpose is disclosed to the warring governments, none of them will oppose free passage of our steamer, for it will go on a mission of charity."

"Before Christmas time last year several cargoes of toys and other similar articles were allowed to go through to the different European countries, and food is continually passing to the Belgian relief commission, so there is little doubt but that these apples will be considered in the same light as the other gifts which America has donated to the war ridden countries."

A local apple man who has interested himself in the matter, and who has figured out how it can be done, says: "It is a big proposition and will require skillful handling, but it can be done. The value of the fruit alone would approximate $300,000 f. o. b. at New York, for the reason that apples are worth more than they were a year ago. Of course the expense of outfitting a vessel is a matter that has not been fully decided upon, but the fruit people have always been charitably disposed in cases like this, and they will help too find the means if assurances are given that the apples will reach the people for whom they are intended. There are about 25,000,000 men actively engaged in the various armies and navies in the European war, and a great many more who are indirectly. To give all of these people even one American apple each, would require about 50,000,000 apples and taking 500 apples to the barrel, which would be medium sized fruit, 100,000 barrels or 300,000 boxes, at the lowest estimate, will have to be provided. At present the minimum market value of this fruit is $3.00 a barrel. It has been estimated that the whole undertaking will cost not less than $500,000, but when we stop to figure that every person in this country, no matter what his nationality may be, could easily lend a hand in the undertaking, it is not such a difficult proposition as one might suppose."

Apple men hope to have the European belligerents agree upon a one day armistice while the apple are being distributed, and it is planned to get everything in readiness for the vessel to sail on National Apple Day, October 19th, so that the consignment may reach the various fighting zones and hospitals during the early part of November when Europe's scant fruit supply will have been exhausted for this season.

The Western Michigan Development Bureau and other similar organizations are interested in the "American Apple Ship" plan and are co-operating with the international apple shippers' association and the apple trade generally to bring it to a successful issue.

WILL REMAIN ANOTHER YEAR

Rev. L. C. Vinyard Has Made An Excellent Record During Past Year.

With the completion of the present week, the first year of work for Rev. L. C. Vinyard as pastor of the Baptist church ends, and the members of that denomination can congratulate themselves on the excellent record made during this period of time.

Altogether thirty-five new members have been added to the church roll, with a number of others about to be admitted. Not only has the church prospered in membership, but a large amount of other work has been done. The building has been repainted, parlors remodeled, basement rearranged and there is now under construction a fine large and roomy kitchen.

Commencing with October 1, Rev. Vinyard has arranged for plans for the coming year, which without a doubt will extend over a two year period. In connection with this he has resigned a salary of $1200.00 a year, believing it unscriptural to place his work on a salary basis. He does not believe in commercializing the gospel of the Son of God. In the future he will accept what the members of his church deem it their duty to give him.

During the coming winter he will again take up his work of organization among the boys, holding meetings each week and is now preparing a series of lectures to be given before his clubs by prominent citizens of Charlevoix.

APPLIES TO MANY KINGS

Days' Catch of Protected Fish Means 25 of All Varieties.

According to an opinion rendered today by attorney-general's department for the game warden, when the legislature limit on the number of bluegills, sunfish, rock bass, white bass, catfish, perch, walled eye pike and chappie, it put a limit on the total of the various kinds that could legally be taken with a hook and line.

The way the attorney-general's department construed the new fishing law, a fisherman can take but 25 of the above fish all told. This limit does not apply to pay one variety but the total number.

AUCTION SALE SEASON

Watch for Advertisements in the Courier Every Issue This Fall.

Farmers will soon be through getting in their crops and the auction season is about to open. On account of the uniformly high prices which farmers receive for live stock and farm products in general there will evidently be a less number of sales this fall and winter than usual, though a number will find another part of the country more congenial, and will "pick up and leave" in the future as in the past.

It will therefore behoove everyone who is in the market for anything in the stock line to watch the Courier advertising columns carefully. The Courier is the acknowledged auction paper for Charlevoix county. As to its real value as an advertising medium ask any of the scores of satisfied folks who have used the Courier exclusively in advertising their sales.

If you are contemplating having a sale during this fall or coming spring be sure and consult the Courier early so as to avoid conflicting dates. We make dates with auctioneers.

GOOD WORK DONE ON CLEAN-UP DAY

Citizens Movement Friday to Clean Up Park a Success.

Huge Piles of Brush Piled Up Along the Beach Evidence of Work Accomplished.

Huge piles of brush along the beach is sufficient evidence that a considerable amount of work was accomplished in the city park on Park Clean-Up Day.

Thursday morning's cloudy opening, followed later by a drizzling rain, stopped all activities on that day, and work was postponed until the following day, which proved a fine one from daylight to dark.

Work commenced early in the morning and continued throughout the day. Logs, broken limbs, dead trees, brush, etc., were hauled into great piles on the beach, and the underbrush cleared up, the area of activities south in the park reaching nearly to the foot of Mason street.

During the forenoon rigs gathered up a large amount of good things to eat that had been donated about the city, and at noon the hungry workers were treated to a fine picnic dinner.

The day was all that could be asked for and the work accomplished shows what the people of Charlevoix can do when they make up their minds to attempt anything for the betterment of the city.

At Congregational Church.

Italy Day will be observed next Sunday at the Congregational Church. A special program has been arranged for the Sunday School hour and the members of the Y. P. S. C. E. will rally for the winters work at the devotional meeting. The hour of holding the evening service will be one-half hour earlier from October 1st to April 1st.

Charlevoix Must Provide Suitable Comfort Stations

State Legislature Compels City to Do What is for their Best Interests Regardless of Neglect in Past.

Will the city of Charlevoix comply with the statutes of the state of Michigan and construct public comfort stations in the downtown district?

The legislature of 1915, made it mandatory upon all incorporated cities and villages to construct such public conveniences, and there is nothing left for the city of Charlevoix to do but comply.

Section 1, Act No. 285, of the Session Laws of 1915, reads as follows: "It shall be the duty of the common council of any city in this state, and of the board of trustees of any incorporated village, to cause to be constructed and maintained in such village or city not less than one public closet, commonly known and designated as a public convenience station, in such place or places as directed by the local board of health. Such closets or public convenience stations shall have thereon the proper signs and be so placed as directed by the local board of health as to be easily accessible from the business district or

CHARLEVOIX ROD AND GUN CLUB

Final Action Taken Towards Its Organization Tuesday Night.

Charter Open to Membership Until Tuesday Evening, October 5—Officers Elected.

Final action was taken Tuesday night toward the organization of the Charlevoix Rod & Gun Club, when some fifteen local sportsmen met at the K. of P. hall and went over the final plan.

By-laws were adopted which was followed by the election of the following officers for the ensuing year: President, A. L. Fitch; vice-president, Harry E. McHugh; secretary, Grover Genett; and treasurer, Richard Lewis. Committees on ways and means, entertainment and law enforcement will be named at the first annual meeting to be held next Tuesday evening at the same place.

The object of the club is to aid in the preservation of wild life, and make a united effort to restock all trout streams and lakes in the vicinity of Charlevoix. The members have pledged themselves to do all in their power to see that existing game laws are enforced and also make an effort to educate along these lines. The membership fee was placed at $1.00, with the same amount as yearly dues. The charter will be open to membership until the next meeting night, October 5, when it will close, and those wishing to join thereafter will be given the opportunity, subject to the approval of the existing membership.

It is the intention and object of the club to enlist the help of the citizens of Charlevoix in this line of work. Few realize how many people spend their summers here principally on account of the beautiful inland lakes and good fishing. Trolling in Pine Lake for rainbow trout is said by many who have fished in the waters of the best places in the United States to equal the salmon fishing of Columbia river and points in Nova Scotia. For this reason alone many come here, and if, through the efforts of a well organized rod and gun club, these waters can be restocked every year, it will be a great drawing card for Charlevoix.

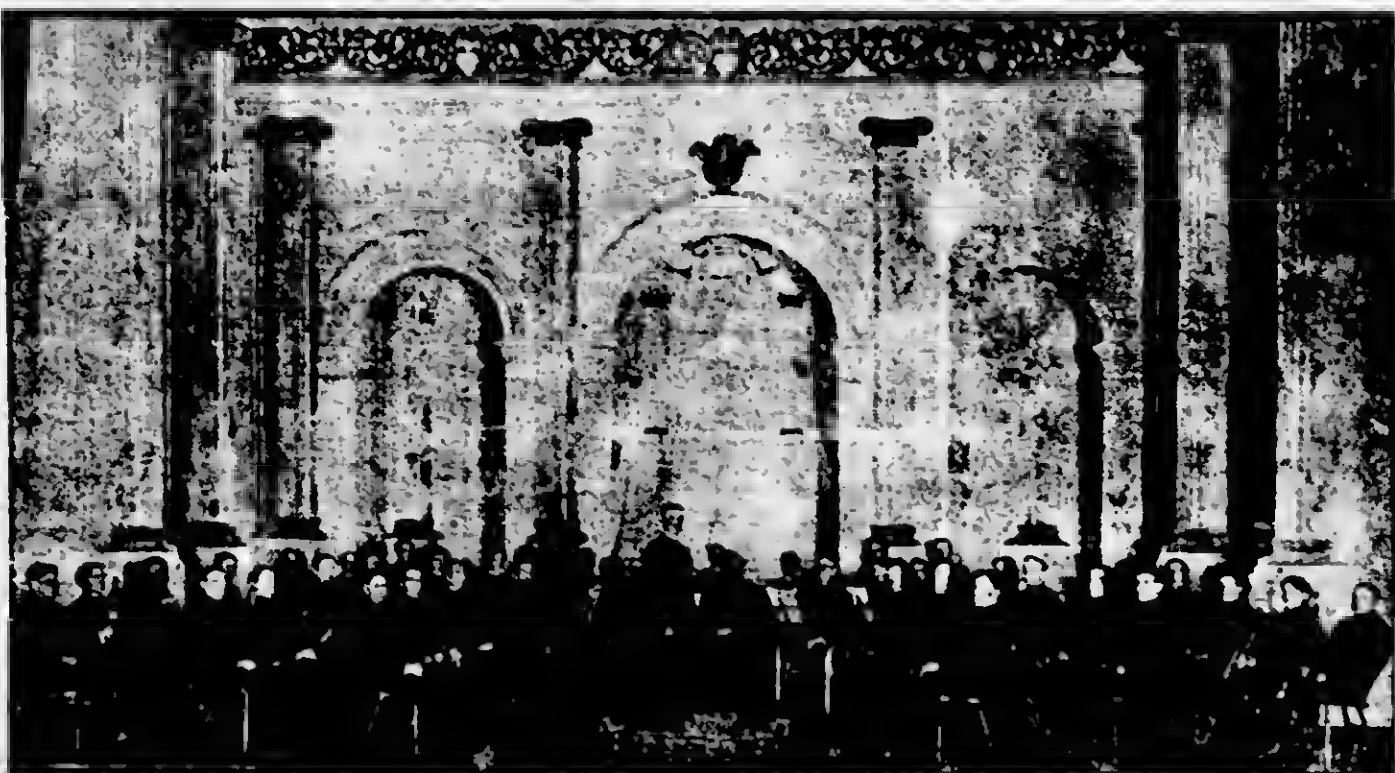

The club has set as its meeting night the first Tuesday of the month, and asks the co-operation of the citizens of Charlevoix.

Furniture City Military Band Which Will be in Charlevoix, Friday, October 8, With Members of Grand Rapids Association of Commerce.

The latest information we have regarding the arrival of members of the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce, due to be at the Pere Marquette station in Charlevoix on Friday, October 8, is that there will be the largest number of wholesalers that have ever participated in these trade extension trips in the past nine years.

These men rise and fall with the prosperity or failure, as it may be, in Western Michigan. No set of men could come from the metropolis of Western Michigan who are so interested in the development of towns, country, resorts, and every undeveloped resource offered by our great western Michigan territory. It is the expression of these men that a better acquaintance may be had with the citizens and business interests of our city, and a united feeling made between us that will result in co-operated efforts of development.

It will be a treat to hear the Furniture City Military band, who will accompany the excursion, playing the latest in music. The wholesalers carry a special car loaded with souvenirs, which will be given away at each stopping point. Charlevoix should give them a royal welcome.

Barefoot Boy

Barefoot boy in the far green land, Bearing a fishing pole in your hand, Barefoot boy in the old and still, End ante pond at the back of the mill, Barefoot boy, with that careless swing, Owner of Arcady, summer's king, To ramble me through of valley and hill, You are welcome and you are still, Thanking the Lord that there's boyhood still, That smiles oblivious to everything!

Barefoot boy—who are making the earth A place of joy and a place of mirth, A new domain for the vision of life, Softening and sweetening the burden of strife, Bringing the sunshine to hearts that never lifting the souls that are in the rife And struggle and conflict with sin and strife,

Up to a service for all men's sake In the deathless combat life makes for truth, When there's so much more than the truth at stake!

Barefoot boy, in the sunbriht lane, You are creating us over again; You, with your whistle, your freckled face, Your wild abandon to native grace Of movement and action and song and glee,

Child of the blossom and bird and tree, King of the woodland, and friend of the stream, God of the morning of vision to be, Knowing your power and keeping your place,

For the sake of the song and the smile and the dream And the hope of the spirit that set us free!

Saving in the Home.

In systematic saving lies the secret of a successful housekeeper. Not stinting or denying, but practical, regular saving. Five or 10 cents put carefully away regularly soon means $3 or $4 with which to buy some household necessity, perhaps luxury, and money saved in this way is never missed. Money saving is a habit, once formed hard to break, and means comfort and satisfaction to the housekeeper who will acquire it. —San Francisco Chronicle.

Entered at Charlevoix Postoffice as second class matter.

If the inroads of the mail-order houses on the business of the country merchants is to be stopped, publishers must come to the front with their assistance. Some publishers are of the opinion that it is up to the dealers to fight their own battles, but those most far-sighted realize that a growing community will be beneficial to their business. No publisher ever lost much by giving his help to aid his neighbor.

But merchants should remember that publishers are entitled to the support of those they aim to help, especially in the case of opposing the mail-order houses. By liberal advertising any dealer who finds that out of town concerns are hurting his business can recuperate his losses and turn the trend in his direction.

Local merchants wonder why it is that the mail-order business is constantly increasing, when to the mind of a man who knows the first principles of advertising it is perfectly plain.

If the local man would advertise properly the new articles that he receives and constantly keep the public informed as to what he carries in stock, all the trouble it would be to the housewife when she wanted an article would be to call the merchant over the telephone and tell him to load the article on the wagon when it came to town. The way the majority of local merchants carry on their business the public will never know what they have in stock.

The time is coming when a man who won't advertise will be considered out of the game, or rather will have to get out and make room for progressive men who are building up their business by advertising.

The above facts are true in every line of the mercantile business and it is encouraging to the newspaper man to know that the majority of the merchants are waking up on this question. However, there are those who are beyond redemption and will be buried so deep that they will never be able to see the light of prosperity that will come to those who are taking advantage of proper advertising methods. If the merchant would do his share this would be eliminated.

Any merchant in Charlevoix can meet the price of a mail-order house if the purchaser gives him a chance. The advantage to the purchaser in buying at home is, if goods are not as represented, he can have it made right.

EVERY now and again the attorney general reminds the public of his existence by putting out an opinion on some law passed by the last congress. The gist of this democrat's judgment on most of these democratic statutes is that they are inoperative. Time was when it was the function of the courts to pass on questions of this sort, but nowadays a ministerial officer supplants the courts and, instead of a government by construed law, we have a government by opinion.

A middle-aged bachelor was in a restaurant at breakfast the other morning when he noticed this inscription on the egg: "To whom it may concern: Should this meet the eye of some young man who desires to marry a farmer's daughter, 18 years of age, kindly communicate with—, Sparta, N. Now what was the age of the egg?

The little boy pulled the string tight and smiled up at her. "My mother's fat, too," he explained.

THEATRICAL

Obviously, some theatrical attractions come here occasionally that some people can afford to miss, once in a while there is something that everybody can afford to miss—but an attraction that no one can afford to miss is Lyman H. Howe's travel which comes to the Majestic Theater on October 5th.

This assertion applies even more for the forthcoming visit than any preceding one, merely because Mr. Howe promises a trip to both California Expositions through the Panama Canal, a ride on a submarine, a pictorial excursion to Bruges, Belgium, to Holland, etc., but—because it will also be a return engagement of that delightful, thrice-blessed, never-to-be-forgotten baby which appeared here once before and having that time of his year old life breaking, tearing and eating lots of things and then finding bliss supreme by sitting in the very happiest middle of a nice, big, soft puddle of black mud—a picture of child which prompted Douglas Gordon of the Richmond Times-Dispatch to address him thus "Baby, happier than any piggy that ever squealed, you'll never be so exalted in all-glorious ecstasy again. So sit there, dabble in it, lie down in it and roll; many a man who watches you has wished in his life for just such a beautiful puddle as you've got."

Besides "Our Baby" there will also be, freely interspersed throughout the program, those uproarious absurdities—the Howesque animated cartoons—that can always be depended upon to convulse the most sedate audience with laughter. They are evolved by the sprightly fancies of artists in Howe's studios who devote week after week, month after month and year after year solely to create these lively imaginative figures for the delectation of "Howe travelers."

A new idea in motion pictures which will have its initial performance at the Majestic Theatre, Friday, October 1st will be Kingsley & Roberts' massive photoplay "Silver Threads Among The Gold," with Richard J. Jose in the leading role. His supporting company includes Carroll Johnson, Geo. H. Adams, Dora Dean, Anna Day, Mrs. R. E. French, Guy D'Enery, Philip Quin and the famous Lee children, and over 165 others. No photoplay that has been presented to date contains so many novel and interesting scenes and pictures a story of heart and home interest with its humor, its characters are real live human beings, portrayed by actors of experience in natural acting. In fact, it will leave an impression that will make one feel better for seeing it.

Charlevoix Boy May Make Team.

Among the forty candidates for the Knox college football team at Galesburg, Illinois, is Fred Gregory, of Charlevoix. Gregory is out for a backfield position and has been showing up favorably under preliminary practice. Coach Leo Carter DeTray, former pride and joy of Alonzo Stagg at Chicago University, is coaching the Knox gridiron warriors and threatens to develop a team which will repeat the successes of former Knox varsities.

Gregory and Ward Bennett, also of Charlevoix, have entered into Knox activities from the start. Both of these boys are pledged to the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity at Knox.

CARLYLE'S FIRST LOVE.

She May Have Been the Blumline of "Sartor Resartus."

During the year 1818 Thomas Carlyle, the Scotch philosopher, was living at Kirkcaldy, and he seems then for the first time to have fallen in love. The lady appears not to have returned the attachment, although she, with great insight, at the age of twenty-two, perceived the genius of her suitor of twenty-five.

In the letter in which she took leave of her admirer she used these significant expressions: "Cultivate the milder dispositions of your heart, subdue the more extravagant visions of the brain. . . . Genius will render you great. May virtue render you beloved." "Let your light shine before men, and I think them not unworthy this trouble."

Many years after, when Carlyle wrote his reminiscences, he described the episode. He says that Margaret Gordon "carried off her husband's soul" three years a figure hanging more or less in my fancy, on the usual pattern and latterly quite original and strong terms.

The real interest of the story is that Margaret Gordon is the original of the Blumline of "Sartor Resartus." One critic would have us answer that although Jane Wren in it have in spirit some of the details, it was Margaret Gordon who was the true original.—New York Telegram.

THE FAUST LEGEND.

For 1,000 years the Faust legend—the sale of a human soul to a devil—has existed. The first recorded hint of its vitality is given in the sixth century story of "Theophilus." That story suited the early Christians in their efforts to stamp out the heathenish practices of evilly disposed persons prone to seek power by unholy means. The association of the name of Faust, now ever, with the legend is not more than 400 years old. The likeliest prototype of the modern Faust is the man of the same name who in Cracow boldly proclaimed himself a professor of magic. In the sixteenth century stories Helen of Troy was bestowed by Mephistopheles upon Faust, and not until the middle of the eighteenth century does there appear a shadowy Margaret in the form of a "beautiful but poor girl," who afterward develops into the Margaret of Goethe.

Peg o' My Heart

A Comedy of Youth Founded by Mr. Manners on His Great Play

"I only promised to stay a month."
"Didn't they want you any longer?"
"In one way they did and in another they didn't. It's a long history—that's what it is. Let us sit down here as we used to in the early days and I'll tell you the whole of the happenings since I left ye."

She softened some things and omitted others—Ethel entirely. That episode should be locked forever in Peg's heart.

Jerry she touched on lightly.
"There's one thing, Peg, that must part us some day when it comes to you," he finally said.

"What's that, father?"
"Love, Peg."

She lowered her eyes and said nothing.

"Has it come? Has it, Peg?"
She buried her face on his breast, and, though no sound came, he knew by the trembling of her little body that she was crying.

So it had come into her life.

The child he had sent away a month ago had come back to him transformed in that little time into a woman.

The cry of youth and the call of life had reached her heart.

After awhile he stood up.
"You'd better be going to bed, Peg."

"All right, father."

She went to the door. Then she stopped.

"You're glad I'm home, father?"
He pressed her closely to him.

"I'll never love ye again," she whispered.

All through that night Peg lay awake, searching through the past and trying to pierce through the future.

Toward morning she slept, and in a whirling dream she saw a body floating down a stream. She stretched out her hand to grasp it when the eyes met hers, and the eyes were those of a dead man—and the man was Jerry!

She woke trembling with fear, and she turned on the light and tumbled into a chair and sat chattering with terror until she heard her father moving in his room. She went to the door and asked him to let her go to him.

He opened the door and saw his little Peg, wild-eyed, pale and terror-stricken, standing on the threshold. The look in her eyes terrified him.

"What is it, Peg, are you ill? What is it?"

She crept in and looked up into his face with her startling eyes, and she grasped him with both of her small hands and in a voice dull and hopeless cried despairingly:

"I dreamt he was dead—dead! An I couldn't reach him. An he went on past me—down the stream with his face upturned." The grasp loosened and just as she slipped from him O'Connell caught her in his strong arms and placed her gently on the sofa, and she fell asleep.

Those first days following Peg's return found father and child nearer each other than they had been since that famous trip through Ireland when he lectured from the back of his historical cart.

She became O'Connell's amanuensis.
During the day she would go from library to library in New York verifying data for her father's monumental work.

One evening some few weeks after her return she was in her room preparing to begin her night's work with her father when she heard the bell ring. That was unusual. Their callers were few. She heard the outer door open, then the sound of a distant voice mingling with her father's.

Then came a knock at her door.

"There's somebody outside here to see ye, Peg," said her father.

"Who is it, father?"

"A perfect stranger to me. He quicks now."

She heard her father's footsteps go into the little sitting room and then the hum of voices.

Her father was talking. She opened the door and walked in. A tall, bronzed man came forward to greet her.

Her heart almost stopped. She trembled violently. The next moment Jerry had clasped her hand in both of his.

"How are you, Peg?"

He smiled down at her as he used to in Regal Villa, and behind the smile there was a grave look in his dark eyes and the old tone of tenderness in his voice.

"How are you, Peg?" he repeated.

"I'm fine, Mr. Jerry," she replied in a daze. Then she looked at O'Connell, and she hurried on to say:

"This is my father, Sir Gerald Adair."

"We'd introduced ourselves already," said O'Connell good naturedly, eying the unexpected visitor all the while. "And what might ye be doin' in New York?" he asked.

"I have never seen America. I take an Englishman's interest in what we once owned."

"An' lost through misgovernment."

"Well, we'll say misgovernment,"

"As they'll one day lose Ireland."

"I hope not. The two countries understand each other better every day."

The bell rang again. Peg started to go, but O'Connell stopped her.

"It's McGinnis. This is his night to call and tell me the politics of the town. I'll take him into the next room, Peg, until yer visitor is gone."

"Oh, please," said Jerry hurriedly and taking a step toward the door, "allow me to call some of er time."

"Stay where ye are!" cried O'Connell, hurrying out as the bell rang again.

"I want to ask ye somethin', Sir Gerald," she began.

"Jerry!" he corrected.

"Please forgive me for what I said to ye that day. It was wrong of me to say it. Yet it was just what ye might have expected from me. But ye'd been so blue to me—a little nobody—all that wonderful month that it's hurt me ever since, an' I didn't dare write to ye. It would have looked like presumption from me. But now that ye've come here ye've found me out, an' I want to ask yer pardon, an' I want to ask ye not to be angry with me."

"I couldn't be angry with you, Peg."

He paused, and as he looked at her the reserve of the held in, still contained man was broken. He bent over her and said softly:

"Peg, I love you!"

The room swam around her.

Was all her misery to end?

Did this man come back from the mist of memory because he loved her?

She tried to speak, but nothing came from her parched lips and tightened throat.

Then she became conscious that he was speaking again, and she listened to him with all her senses, with all her heart and from her soul.

"I knew you would never write to me, and somehow I wondered just how much you cared for me—it at all. So I came here. I love you, Peg. I want you to be my wife. I want to care for you and tend you and make you happy. I love you!"

Her heart leaped and strained.

"Do you love me?" she whispered, and her voice trembled and broke.

"I do. Indeed I do. Be my wife."

"But you have a title," she pleaded.

"Share it with me," he replied.

"You'd be so ashamed of me."

"No, Peg; I'd be proud of you. I love you!"

Peg broke down and sobbed.

"I love you, too, Mr. Jerry."

In a moment she was in his arms.

It was the first time any one had touched her tenderly besides her father.

Jerry stroked her hair and looked into her eyes and smiled down at her lovingly as he asked:

"What will your father say?"

She looked happily up at him and answered:

"Do you know one of the first things my father taught me when I was just a little child?"

"It was from Tom Moore, 'Oh, there's nothin' half so sweet in life—as love's young dream.'"

When O'Connell came into the room later he realized that the great summons had come to his little girl.

The thought came to him that he was about to give to England his daughter in marriage! Well, had he not taken from the English one of her fairest daughters as his wife?

And a silent prayer went up from his heart that happiness would abide with his Peg and her Jerry and that their romance would last longer than had Angela's and his.

AFTERWORD.

AND now the moment has come to take leave of the people I have lived with for so long. Yet though I say "Adieu" I feel it is only a temporary leave taking.
Their lives are so linked with mine that some day in the future I may be tempted to draw back the curtain and show the passage of years in their various lives.

Some day with O'Connell we will visit Peg in her English home and see the marriage tale and how it came

Bridges Rusted by Salt.

Recent investigations of the Illinois state highway department indicate that few highway steel bridges in that state are patented after their final completion and acceptance. Very serious corrosion results and is illustrated in a number of cases. A serious factor in the corrosion of iron and steel is the use of salt to clear the roadway of snow and ice. This was considered at least partly responsible for the final condition of truss members in a bridge which had been about fifteen years in service.—Engineering Record.

Cutting Fiber Washers.

Different size washers can be made from fiber one-eighth inch thick easily and quickly with a hand and lat. So lect a bit for the size required and have until a light shaving is taken off, then turn the fiber over and insert the point of the bit into the hole bore in like manner. The projecting cutters for cutting the outside circle of the hole will cut from both sides, and a washer the size of the bit will drop out. The size hole desired can then be made in the washer.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

A BIT OF HISTORY.

The revenue system by which the United States became a partner in the liquor business originated during the Civil war. In order to prosecute the war to free four million slaves, the congress of the United States passed a bill putting a high tax on liquor.

When the bill had passed both houses, Salmon P. Chase, secretary of the treasury, brought it to President Lincoln for his signature. "Chase," said Mr. Lincoln, "I would rather have my right arm taken off than to sign that bill, but I reckon I'll have to do it. You say it is necessary to carry on this war to free those human slaves. We have got to do it. But tell me, Chase, will you promise, and will congress promise, to repeal this bill as soon as the war is over?"

Chase promised.

But at the close of the war and before the promise could be redeemed, President Lincoln was assassinated, and the promise forgotten. Doubtless had Lincoln lived the country would not today be under the domination of the legalized liquor traffic.

TREND OF THOUGHT.

At the convention in Chicago of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World no speaker evoked more enthusiastic applause than did Mr. Henry D. Estabrook, a New York attorney, when he made a plea for temperance and lauded the European rulers who are curbing the drink evil. This expression of temperance sentiment among the country's advertising men is, said Mr. H. S. Houston, the newly elected president of the associated clubs, "significant of the trend of thought. These men are in closer touch with the public feeling and desires than any other class except newspaper men. Perhaps better than politicians they reflect the general state of mind on a grave problem, and censurings may be drawn from their attitude."

TRAVELERS WANT PROHIBITION.

Years ago the traveling man got many orders by taking his customers out and buying them drinks. In fact the system was highly approved and commonly employed. But now comes the Iowa Union of Commercial Travelers, in convention assembled, and calls for national prohibition. The very men who used to be regarded as the friends of liquor are now its enemies. Why? Because they know the saloon business cripples trade, and when trade is crippled traveling men can't sell goods. Any traveling man will tell you now that business is better in dry towns and collections come easier.—Slovak City News.

BEER A POISON.

The man who uses a quart of beer daily expends enough for it to buy three loaves of bread for his family, says Dr. Winfield Scott Hall. He gets for himself a trivial amount of nourishment worth half a cent and incidentally takes into his system nearly two ounces of a narcotic poison, the influence of which is to make him less alert and therefore more amenable to accidents, to make him less efficient and therefore more likely to lose his job, and to make him more likely to suffer from toxins and infections.

CANNOT AFFORD TO DRINK.

"In and for the future it will be known that no nation can afford to drink," says Rector Saleeby, distinguished British Scientist, "writing in the London Chronicle. 'Every mole-cule of the poison alcohol means a smashed and lost molecule of sugar, the superlative food and fuel for energy, work and warmth. Nations that choose this slow suicide will go down like their predecessors, in the night of Time.'"

WHY HE KEEPS SOBER.

"Why don't you drink?" I asked my friend, the honest saloonkeeper.

"Well, you see," he replied, "I'm a business man. I don't indulge, because I want to make money, not to drink it up. I insist on absolute sobriety among my bartenders and porters. It's bad enough for the boys to have to look at my patrons. Besides, a drunken employee is only 15 per cent efficient."—Cincinnati Republican Gazette.

CONDEMN USE OF ALCOHOL.

Forty-one of the physicians of Oshkosh, Wis., have put themselves on record in writing as condemning the use of alcoholic beverages and declaring that "organized medicine should infinite and carry on a systematic, persistent propaganda for the education of the public regarding the deleterious effects of alcohol."

POINCARÉ A TEETOTALER.

To the National Anti-Alcohol League of France President Poincaré has sent the following statement:

"You ask the president of the republic to follow the examples of other heads of states and take an engagement to abstain from all spirituous liquors during the war. That is an engagement the president takes willingly and without difficulty, not only for the duration of the war, but even afterwards. He never drinks alcoholic liquors."

OUR PUBLIC FORUM

Hon. Elihu Root
On Woman's Sphere

The question of Woman Suffrage is an issue before the American people. Twelve states have adopted it, four more upon it this fall and it is strongly urged that it become a platform demand of the national political parties. It is therefore the privilege and the duty of every voter to study carefully this subject. Hon. Elihu Root, in discussing this question before the constitutional convention of New York, recently said in part:

"I am opposed to the granting of suffrage to women, because I believe that it would be a loss to women, to all women and to every woman; and because I believe it would be an injury to the state, and to every man and every woman in the state. It would be useless to argue this if the right of suffrage were a natural right. If it were a natural right, then women should have it though the heavens fall. But if there be any one thing settled in the long discussion of this subject, it is that suffrage is not a natural right, but is simply a means of government, and the sole question to be discussed is whether government by the suffrage of men and women will be better government than by the suffrage of men alone.

"Into my judgment, sir, there enters no element of the inferiority of woman. It is not that woman is inferior to man, but it is that woman is different from man; that in the distribution of powers, of capacities, of qualities, our Maker has created man adapted to the performance of certain functions in the economy of nature and society, and woman adapted to the performance of other functions.

"Woman rules today by the sweet and noble influences of her character. Put woman into the arena of conflict and she abandons these great weapons which control the world, and she takes into her hands, feeble and nerveless for strife, weapons with which she is unfamiliar and which she is unable to wield. Woman in strife becomes hard, harsh, unlovable, repulsive; as far removed from that gentle creature to which the heaven is removed from the earth.

"The whole science of government is the science of protecting life and liberty and the pursuit of happiness. In the divine distribution of powers, the duty and the right of protection rests with the male. It is so throughout nature. It is so with men, and I, for one, will never consent to part with the divine right of protecting my wife, my daughter, the women whom I love, and the women whom I respect, exercising the birthright of man, and place that high duty in the weak and nerveless hands of those designed by God to be protected rather than to engage in the stern warfare of government. In my judgment, this whole movement arises from a false conception of the duty and of the right of both men and women.

"The time will never come when the line of demarcation between the functions of the two sexes will be broken down. I believe it to be false philosophy. I believe that it is an attempt to turn backward upon the line of social development, and that if the step ever be taken, we go centuries backward on the march towards a higher, nobler and purer civilization, which must be found not in the confusion, but in the higher differentiation of the sexes."

WILL AID SETTLERS

Emmet County Lumber Company to Rebate One Years Interest.

According to reports from Cecil Bay, that small mill and farming settlement in the north part of Emmet county, the Emmet Lumber company, which operates the mills there and has sold a lot of good land to settlers, is planning to aid these settlers, who suffered considerable loss because of the late spring and early summer frosts which killed most of their crops.

The company will give the settlers one year's interest on their lands and furnish them seed for their crops of next year's planting. Paul Leake, of Grand Rapids, who has just paid a visit to the company's plant at Cecil Bay and the farms there, says thirty-five families will be aided in this way. — Petoskey Evening News.

A recent dispatch from Brownsville, Texas, states that Private Cecil Kennedy of Central Lake, a member of Troop B, Twelfth United States Cavalry, was shot and seriously injured in a scrimmage near that place on Friday last.

CIGARETTE LAW BEING VIOLATED

New Law Seems to be Little Understood
By People of Michigan.

Seemingly Ignorance or Neglect Likely to Get Some Dealer into Serious Trouble.

For some reason or other there seems to be ignorance of the state law which was passed by the last state legislature. However the fact remains that the state of Michigan at the present time has one of the strictest laws regarding the sale of cigarettes to minors that can be found in the United States. And the law is violated, not only in Charlevoix, but in many cities in the state.

Cigarettes, cigars and tobacco are being sold to boys under the age of twenty-one. Hardly a day passes but they are seen on the streets smoking the weed. There is a big kick going on right now in the public schools regarding students indulging in the habit. In fact, the use of tobacco came near ending all future prospects along the line of athletics this year. Tobacco and athletics do not nor will not work in harmony. The boy who expects to "play the game" in athletics must cut out tobacco. And the dealer who sells his supply should be punished to the fullest extent of the law. There is nothing so disgusting to the average person, than to see a young lad with a "coffin nail" between his lips, or smoking a filthy pipe. They will have to cut it out if they take part in athletics in the Charlevoix Public Schools, says Superintendent Craig. It's either no athletics, and he is to be congratulated on the stand he has taken. Below is published the statutes in full. Dealers should read them carefully and make it a point to sell no tobacco in any form to minors. Otherwise, it is safe to say that prosecution will follow.

The law is No. 31 of the Public Acts of Michigan for 1915. It was originated and passed to cover the sale to and use of cigarettes by minors. The act proper is as follows:

Section 1—Any person within the state who sells, gives to, or in any way furnishes any cigarettes in any form to any person under twenty-one years of age, shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $50 or imprisonment in the county jail for not to exceed 30 days for each offense.

Section 2—Any person under twenty-one years of age who shall smoke or use cigarettes in any form, on any public highway, street, alley, park or other land used for public purposes, or in any public place of business or amusement, may be arrested by any officer of the law, who may be cognizant of such offense; and further, it shall be the duty of such officer on complaint of any person and upon warrant properly issued to arrest such offenders and take them to the proper court. In case the offender is found guilty the court may impose a penalty in his discretion in the sum not to exceed $10 or imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed 5 days for each offense.

Section 3—Any person who knowingly harbors any person under twenty-one years of age, or grants to them the privilege of gathering upon or frequenting any property or land held by him, for the purpose of indulging in the use of cigarettes in any form shall be held under the same penalty as provided for under section 1 of this act. Provided, that no part of this act shall be construed as to interfere with the rights of parent or lawful guardians in the rearing and management of their minor children or wards within the bounds of their own private premises.

BAD FIRE AT ST. JAMES B. I.

Four Buildings Go Up in Smoke on Island
Friday Morning.

Fire First Discovered in George Williams' Meat Market—Loss $4,000.

The village of St. James, Beaver Island, was visited with a serious fire early last Friday morning, which resulted in the total loss of four buildings.

The fire was first discovered about two o'clock in the rear of the old bowling alley, occupied by George Williams as a meat market, and had gained considerable headway. From here it spread to the pool room, the barber shop and a vacant building formerly occupied by Franklin's tailor shop.

It was but a short time before the four buildings were ablaze. A bucket brigade was quickly formed, but the fire was beyond control, and all that could be done was to make an effort to save adjoining buildings.

The stock, building and fixtures of the Williams' Meat Market are a total loss, as were also the pool tables and bar fixtures in the pool room. A part of the fixtures in the barber shop were saved, but the building and that formerly occupied by the tailor shop burned to the ground.

The buildings were owned by C. C. Gallagher of Escanaba and carried but a small amount of insurance. The loss will amount to $4,000 or over.

C. H. S. PLAY A TIE GAME

Saturdays Game at Mancelona Resulted in Score of 6 to 6.

Local Eleven Is Met Boyne City on Home Grounds
Saturday Next.

Charlevoix and Mancelona fought to a 6-6 tie at the latter city last Saturday, in the first encounter that has taken place between the two schools for several years. Mancelona was weakened, so it was stated, by the absence of several men from the first string of players, occasioned by the county fair, but even then they gave the Charlevoix men all they wanted to do to put over one touch down.

Charlevoix was particularly weak on breaking up Mancelona's passes, the one thing that allowed the home team to score their points during the last three minutes of play. Both sides were unable to gain consistently, although at times both seemed to take a brace and put a fair caliber of the game. Considerable juggling and fumbling of the ball lost many yards for both teams.

On Saturday of this week Boyne City is slated to meet the local eleven on the South Side field. This is the second and last game with the East Arm men and promises to be a fight to the finish. Boyne City managed to sneak out a 13-0 game on their own territory two weeks ago, but with two weeks filled with hard and fast practice the locals are ready and determined to turn the tables on the visitors.

Suffrage Notes

Four influential daily papers have lately come out for equal suffrage after opposing it for years—the New York World, the Philadelphia Ledger, the Providence Journal and the Indianapolis News.

Men who favor equal suffrage can give a pointed answer to foolish questions. The other day a benighted individual in Rockland, Mass., asked whether the suffrage women did not want to boss the men. A sturdy and up-to-date American citizen answered promptly: "I do not want to boss my wife and she does not want to boss me. There is no boss at our house but the baby." This sums up pretty well the view of the modern-minded American man.

The Giants and Pirates recently played at Forbes field in Pittsburgh and the proceeds went to aid the suffrage campaign in Pennsylvania. The score was 8 to 4 in favor of the Giants. The captain of the Pirates, Hans Wuyner says: "Equal rights for women, I am for it. Other Pirates say the same." Fred Clarke says: "Woman suffrage has a high batting average and a few errors, I know, because my wife votes in our home State, Kansas."

The Pennsylvania Federation of Liquor Dealers lately voted to oppose votes for women and to contribute to the anti-suffrage campaign. The liquor interests are always shocked and grieved and likewise scared stiff at the thought of women interfering in politics.

FELL ON BROKEN BOTTLE

Little Son of Grant Crandell Receives Bad Cut in His Left Hand.

Saturday while at play with a number of his little friends, Earl, the six year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Grant Crandell, fell on a broken bottle, and severely cut his left hand.

The little fellow started to run and had gone but a short way when he stumbled and fell, striking his left hand onto a broken bottle, cutting a deep gash between the thumb and finger. The hand was cut so badly that the thumb and finger were almost severed and a piece of the glass entered the wrist to the depth of about two inches.

It required the services of Dr. A. M. Wilkinson over an hour to probe for the piece of broken glass that had entered the wrist and dress the wound. However, it is thought that the wound will heal without crippling the hand.

WILL RESIDE IN LANSING

Miss Hattie G. Bon Became Bride of Harold H. Hess Today

Bride a Well Known Teacher in Charlevoix Schools
—Groom a Resident of Lansing.

Wednesday at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Lucy Bon, Miss Hattie Graham Bon became the bride of Mr. Harold H. Hess of Lansing, Michigan. The ceremony took place at 11:30 a. m. in the presence of about twenty-five of the immediate relatives and friends, Rev. Quinton Walker, officiating.

The rooms were prettily decorated in pink and white. The bride was gowned in white Georgette crepe and carried a shower bouquet of pink and white roses. The groom wore conventional black. After the wedding ceremony, a luncheon was served to the assembled relatives and guests.

The bride is a graduate of the Charlevoix High School, class of 1910. The following year she entered the normal school, graduating at the close of the school year. She was engaged the following year as teacher in the Washington school on the north side, and taught during the following four years. Mrs. Hess is a young woman of great personal charm, and was very popular with the younger set. She has been carefully reared in a home of culture and refinement and is indeed fitted to become mistress of the home her husband has prepared for her. The groom is a well known insurance councillor of Lansing and during the time he has spent in this city has made a number of friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Hess left on the afternoon train for Lansing, where they will reside, and have the best wishes of their many Charlevoix friends for a and prosperous wedded life.

The three districts were represented and chose the following delegates to attend State Grange: Mr. Gardner and wife from District No. 1; O. F. Smith and wife from District No. 2; Ira Olney and wife from District No. 3.

The meeting adjourned to meet with Marion Center Grange next October.

PETOSKEY CLEANING UP

Sheriff and Deputies Raid Blind Pigs and Make a Number of Arrests.

Sheriff Purple and his deputies are making it hot for bootleggers and gambling joints in Petoskey. Last week he raided one gambling joint and arrested four people. Several others have been picked up on the charge of bootlegging and their cases will be tried during the coming session of the circuit court.

On Wednesday of last week Roy Pant of this city became entangled in the net and was taken before a justice and bound over to circuit court. Pant is said to be an old offender, and had not confined his operations to Emmet county. Altogether, eight have been pinched in various raids so far, and the officials of that county believe that operations will cease for at least the time being.

Real Estate Changes Hands.

A deal in real estate was consummated last week in which a number of acres of land was involved. John B. Lord of Chicago, one of our well known summer visitors, purchased 101 acres of land lying on the point across from Ironton, known as the Malcolm McDonald farm. Practically all of the land has a lake frontage. The money consideration amounted to $3,500.

INSTANTLY KILLED

Young Resident of North Bay Meets Death at Drummond Island.

The remains of Sidney Tulson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore S. Tulson, who reside in Hayes township, Charlevoix county, just a mile and a half west of North Bay, arrived last Thursday night from Drummond's Island, where the young man met death the previous Monday.

It is reported he was killed by a powder blast. He was working near a hillside where a crew of men were blasting a way through rock for a railroad bed and was struck on the head by a large piece of stone, being killed instantly. His head and neck were crushed badly cut up.

He was thirty-one years of age and had gone to Drummond's Island to work some time last March.

He was buried in the cemetery in Hayes township and the funeral services were from the home of his parents.

Appreciates the Courier.

The following from W. A. Carey, a former well known young man, now located in Detroit, shows to a large extent, how the Courier is appreciated by those living away from Charlevoix, who desire to keep informed as to what is going on in their home town. Mr. Carey says: "The longer I stay away from Charlevoix the more I appreciate receiving the home paper. It keeps me informed about what is doing there. I welcome it every week like a letter."

G. R. TOURISTS HERE TUESDAY

Great Preparations Under Way to Royally Entertain Visitors.

Free Entertainment at Opera House in Evening—Citizens Urged to Turn Out.

Every citizen of Charlevoix should make it a point to be at the Pere Marquette station Friday afternoon and give the glad hand to the members of the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce. The train is due to arrive at 5:15 with hundreds of representatives of the leading wholesale dealers of the Furniture City.

The tour is being made that local dealers may become better acquainted with the heads of the different departments of the large mercantile establishment we deal with, and also that the wholesalers may form a better idea as to local conditions.

The bunch is out for fun and business. They are accompanied by the famous Furniture City Military band, and will have souvenirs for both old and young.

Preparations have been made to give them a royal welcome. A delegation of citizens will meet them at the train and escort them about the city. If you have an automobile, even a Ford, be at the station and do your part in the entertainment.

Free entertainment is booked to take place at the Charlevoix Theatre while the tourists are here. The band will play throughout the down town districts, which will be a treat to all.

Get in line and make the event one that our beautiful little city will be proud of.

THE WEATHER

Plowing Match Postponed.

The date of the Marion Center Grange Plowing Match has been postponed. In last week's Courier it was announced that the event would take place on Friday, October 15. Since this announcement was made, it has been decided to change the date to Thursday, October 21. The usual features of the day will be pulled off and a good crowd is looked for. Keep in mind the date is Thursday, October 21.

LOCATION OF FOG WHISTLE

Citizens Seriously Object to Its Being Placed on End of Piers.

South Point the Logical Location Says Experience Lake Captain in Interview.

The question of whether or not Charlevoix wants a fog horn installed at the end of the pier is causing considerable talk among the residents of the city at the present time.

Some time ago a petition was prepared, asking that a fog horn be installed on south point. We are told that the petition was circulated and a number of names secured. However, later the word "pier" was substituted for that of "south point," regardless of the intent of the original petition. Now many who signed the petition are anxious to have their names withdrawn as they do approve of the alarm being placed on the end of the piers.

It is generally conceded that the installation of an alarm of this kind on south point is badly need. In a conversation with the captain of a large lake steamer making weekly runs into this port he said as follows: "We are badly in need of a fog signal on south point. It is the logical place for it. It could be easily picked up when coming up the lake, and would be of equal service to boats coming down the lake desiring to make this port. But it would be a serious mistake to have it placed on the end of the piers. Not only would boats experience the same difficulty in picking up the signal in thick weather as they are now up against with the bell, but it would greatly interfere with our resort business. 'The place for a signal of this kind in my judgment,' he said, 'is on south point.' And the writer is of the same opinion.

That the installation of a fog whistle at the end of the piers would greatly interfere and hurt the resort business of this city is without a doubt. It would be the means of driving away hundreds of summer visitors who spend the summer here on the north side. People would not object in the least to one on south point, as at this distance the mournful notes of its interval calls would be softened until hardly noticeable. But on the end of the piers—it would be a serious mistake, and an injustice to those who have thousands of dollars invested here in resort property.

We do not object to south point, as hundreds of others, and believe that all efforts should be made to have it placed there, but do seriously object to its being placed on the piers.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a running or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by Catarrh that cannot be cured by Dr. J. C. Smith's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

RAILROADS AND RUM.

A certain railroad, says "Colliers," announces with pardonable pride that it carried last year on its 26,000 miles of track 188,111,876 passengers, and not one of these passengers was killed in a train accident. "That," says the Canton (O.) Daily News, "is one of the highest records, one of the mightiest noughts, that the year has to boast of." Another newspaper, the Butler (Pa.) Citizen, writes: "There is no doubt whatever that this condition was rendered possible only by the company insisting on strict sobriety on the part of its employees. With drunken engineers, drunken dispatchers, and drunken conductors, accidents and deaths would have been common. Drinking on the part of employees used to cost their employers a lot of money one way or another. But now, always it only costs the railroad man his job."

DRUNKENNESS AND DIVORCE.

A home a day, it is stated, was wrecked by divorce last year in Chicago. A Chicago newspaper, investigating as to what extent alcohol is responsible, gives a summary of its findings. Habitual drunkenness, it says, is the charge in 152 of these divorce cases. To this charge others were added in 124 cases. In 99 of these (in which the charge was drunkenness and cruelty), women were the complainants. These two charges appear together more frequently than any other one combination of charges on which divorces were granted. The cases tabulated were tried before judges of the superior court. Others which came before the circuit court were not tabulated.

DECREASE IN WHISKY.

The following figures are from the Wall Street Journal: Production of whisky in Kentucky in January was 1,980,000 gallons, against 6,102,452 gallons in January, 1914; production in Pennsylvania was 1,073,808 gallons in January, against 1,552,445 a year ago, and in Maryland 506,919 gallons, against 918,582. Whisky bottled in bond in January was 691,608 gallons, as compared with 928,157 in January, 1914. The Kentucky decrease for one month was 66.25 per cent; the Pennsylvania decrease practically 33 per cent and the Maryland one over 40 per cent.

ENLIGHTENED PRACTICE.

The remarkable change in the attitude of the medical profession toward the use of alcohol in the treatment of disease is shown by the records of the Cincinnati hospital, an institution among the greatest of its class in the world and located in one of the whisky centers of the United States. For the year 1914 only seven pints of intoxicants were used for its patients for the entire twelve months, while during six months of 1898, although the capacity of the hospital was considerably less, the records show the use of more than seventeen hundred pints of whisky, beer, wine and gin.

A PROGRESSIVE DISEASE.

Families that serve wine at meals are doing the greatest injustice to their children, for instead of allowing them to drink anything but nonintoxicating drinks they are starting that progressive disease that may end in their ultimate death or disgrace. To see a beautiful young girl drink a cocktail or even a glass of sherry offends health aristocrats, for they know that poison is contained in every drop. The misfortune of all poison taking lies not only in the always advancing appetite but in the always receding will.—Lillian Russell.

LIQUOR AS HOME WRECKER.

The searchlight is being thrown up on the alcoholic question from every angle of vision. Chicago Herald has investigated from the matrimonial angle. To what extent is alcohol responsible for the wrecking of homes by divorce? Answering this question for Chicago—which city, it is said, had a divorce a day last year—the Herald gave a tabulated report. Its findings show among other things that the two charges of habitual drunkenness and cruelty are more frequent in divorce cases than any other combination of charges.

VODKA AND WAR.

"The greatest single sentence ever uttered for prohibition," Charles Johnson asserts in the American Review of Reviews, came from the lips of M. Kharitonoff, controller of the Russian treasury, speaking before the budget committee of the Russian parliament. It ran thus: "With the war and without vodka Russia is more prosperous than with vodka and without the war."

ALCOHOLIC HARD TO HANDLE.

The alcoholic always does badly under surgery. In the first place it takes a great deal more anesthetic to get him ready for the operation, and that adds to his risk. In the second place, he is much more likely to have diseased kidneys and liver, and that adds yet more to his risk, and thirdly, the risk of insanity and of pneumonia after an operation is greater. The abstinent man and woman stand operations best.—Dr. Howard A. Kelly, Johns Hopkins University, noted surgeon.

With the opening of the fall season, the big jobbers and manufacturers are sending out their salesmen. Many of these salesmen are going to call on you, Mr. Retailer. Here are a few suggestions by which you might open the conversation with them:

Ask them what they will do to help you sell the goods they want you to buy. Ask them if their firm is going to advertise their goods in the newspapers of your city. If they reply no, ask them why not?

Tell them that it is necessary for them to create the demand in your city, among your customers, for their line of goods; otherwise you cannot push their line in preference to those manufacturers or jobbers who do create this demand.

Tell them the best way to create the demand is to advertise in the local newspapers; that your customers read the newspapers published here; and that you yourself advertise in them; and that you are not willing to spend your money to make their particular brands popular in this town and later have them take the line away from you and give it to your competitor.

Tell them that you favor goods which are advertised in your local newspapers because you find it more profitable to do so.

This is a mighty good hand to hold. It should be a stand-pat one.

IMPORTS valued at $26,921,467, and duties collected thereon amounting to $2,813,917, is record for the week ending September 11, 1915, at the 13 principal customs districts of the United States. This shows an average ad valorem rate of duty on imports of 10.4 per cent. The annual average ad valorem for the last year under Republican law was 17.6 per cent, a rate which gave generally satisfactory protection to American industries, and provided ample revenue for the government, neither of which tasks is being performed by the Democratic tariff law, as our dwindling treasury balance bears witness. This is not so much due to the war as it is to the large volume of imports which are coming in free of duty.

THERE is a striking parallel of method between the German and the Mexican negotiations. In both are found the same mental operations, the same indefiniteness and the pusillanimity. Bryan used to be blamed for the Mexican policy. But Bryan has gone, while the methods remain. Wilson also remains. Are these methods his? Have they always been his?

If you see a great disturbance in the neighborhood some evening soon, it is not probably the pursuit of miscreants who have committed some awful crime, but merely giving the October couple the customary send off.

MR. BAYAN says that Lincoln, Nebraska, is the finest place of residence in the world; and the Wilson people hope nothing will occur to call Mr. Bryan away from home.

PEGGOLD WAS FIRST AVIATOR TO LOOP THE LOOP IN AIR.

Frenchman Gained Daredevil Record Since the War Began.

Alphonse Peggold, reported killed, probably held more records for freak aerobatics than any other man. He had frequently been mentioned since the war began for his daring work in the air. Last March he was awarded the military medal for his bravery and the value of his work.

Peggold was generally spoken of as the original upside down flier. He had planned to come to this country to give exhibition flights in the summer of 1914, before the war began, but was dissuaded.

Only a few days ago Peggold returned to the French lines after a flight of 180 miles in German territory with ninety-seven bullet holes in the wings of his machine.

Almost endless stories are told of the daring feats performed by Peggold. At one time he caught sight of a German ammunition depot and dropped nine bombs on it. The air concussion was so great from the explosion of the ammunition that his machine was all but wrecked, and he regained his equilibrium only after performing more than exhibition aerobatics. At another time, having boarded a captive German balloon, he ascended to a great height behind the clouds and then abruptly fell out of the sky toward his target. At a distance of only fifty yards he dropped a bomb, which struck the balloon squarely. The vibration waves caused his aeroplane to bounce about as a toy boat on a rough pond. But Peggold still carried his good luck and, manning his steady the craft, sailed away amid a hail of German bullets.

He brought many German aviators to earth and made life for others, so eventful that they were glad to withdraw. "Time and again he has pursued the enemy's aeroplanes successfully," said the French minister of war when he presented Peggold with the military medal. "On one day, Feb. 8, he brought down a monoplane and a biplane and compelled another biplane to land while he was all the time within range of fire."

The teacher was taking a class in the infant Sabbath school room and was making her pupils finish each sentence to show that they understood her. "The idol had eyes," the teacher said, "but it could not—"
"See," cried the children. "It had ears, but it could not—"
"Hear," was the answer. "It had lips," she said, but it could not—"
"Speak," once more replied the children. "It had a nose, but it could not—"
"Wipe it," shouted the children; and the lesson had to stop a moment.

At the end of three weeks of married life a southern dandy returned to the minister who had performed the marriage ceremony and asked for a divorce. After explaining that he could not grant divorces, the minister tried to dissuade his visitor from carrying out his intentions, saying: "You must remember Sam, that you promised to take Liza for better or for worse." "Yassir, I knows dat, boss," rejoined the dandy. "hut—but she's wuss dan I took her fur!"

A man and his wife were once staying at a hotel, when in the night they were aroused from their slumbers by the cry that the hotel was afire. "Now, my dear," said the husband, "I will put into practice what I have preached. Put on all your indispensable apparel and keep cool." Then he slipped his watch into his vest pocket and walked with his wife out of the hotel. When all danger was passed he said: "Now you see how necessary it is to keep cool." The wife for the first time glanced at her husband. "Yes, William," she said, "it is a grand thing, but if I were you I would have put on my trousers."

When an editor approaches the average citizen in the quest of news he is invariably told that the citizen "doesn't know n thing" and that is about as near the truth as the nations of Europe are to effecting a prompt settlement of their differences. Everybody knows something, and most people know a lot of somethings that are worth telling and would make breezy and newsy stories, but they just bottle it up in the walls of their dome and forget that it was there. Sometimes the editor is able to pry it loose word by word until he gets the story, when it would be the easiest and simplest thing in the world to let it all out in a rush. Pull the cork, brother, and let out the contents of your intellectual bottle and we will pass it on to others who are thirsty for news. You know a plenty if you only knew that you know it.

The Dead Horse.

The smart traveling man stood on a corner in the little country village in dusk. He was looking for amusement, and the first object that attracted his attention was an overgrown boy, perhaps fifteen years of age, riding a horse that might have come out of the ark.

"Hello, sonny!" shouted the sales man. "How long has that horse been dead?"

Quick as a flash the boy replied. "Three days, but you're the first tazzard that has noticed it."

The traveling man moved on to the hotel.—Youth's Companion.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

"We don't worry ourselves much about such things out here," she replied, with charming humor. "We don't even worry about the weather. We just take things as they come."

They walked on talking with new intimacy. "Where is your home?" he asked.

"A few miles out of Bear Tooth. You are from the east, Bill says—the far east," we said.

"From New Haven. I've just finished at Yale. Have you ever been in a city?"

"Oh, yes! I go to Denver once in a while, and I saw St. Louis once, but I was only a yearling and don't remember much about it. What are you doing out here, if it's a fair question?"

"I looked away at the mountains. I got rather used up last spring, and my doctor said I'd better come out here for awhile and build up. I'm going up to Meeker's mill. Do you know where that is?"

"I know every stovepipe in this park," she answered. "Joe Meeker is kind of related to me—uncle by marriage. He lives about fifteen miles over the hill from Bear Tooth."

This fact seemed to bring them still closer together. "I'm glad of that," he said pointedly. "Perhaps I shall be permitted to see you now and again? I'm afraid to be lonesome for awhile, I'm afraid."

"Don't you believe it! Joe Meeker's boys will keep you interested," she assured him.

The stage overtook them at this point and Bill, smiling remarked, "If you'd been alone, young fellow, I'd give you a chase." His resentment of the outsider's growing favor with the girl was ludicrously evident.

As they rose into the higher levels the aspen shook its yellowish leaves in the breeze and the purple foothills gained in majesty. Great new peaks came into view on the right, and the lofty cliffs of the Bear Tooth range loomed in naked grandeur high above the blue-green of the pines which clothed their sloping eastern sides.

At intervals the road passed small log ranches craning low on the banks of creeks, but aside from these—and the sparse animal life around them—no sign of settlement could be seen. The valley lay as it had lain for thousands of years, repeating its forests in the meadows of the lower levels and sending forth their myriad grasses. Norcross said to himself, "I have circled the track of progress and have re-entered the border America, where the stage-coach is still the one stirring thing beneath the sun."

At last the driver, with a note of exaltation, called out, "Grain a foot, everybody! It's all the way down hill and there to feed."

And so as the dusk came over the mighty spread of the hills to the east and the peaks to the west darkened from violet to purple black the stage rumbled and rattled and rushed down the winding road through thickening signs of civilization and just at twilight rolled into the little town of Bear Tooth, which is the eastern gateway of the Ute plateau.

Norcross had given a great deal of thought to the young girl behind him, and thought had deepened her charm. Her frankness, her humor, her superb physical strength and her calm self-reliance appealed to him, and the more dangerously because he was so well aware of his own weakness and loneliness, and as the stage drew up before the hotel he fervently said, "I hope I shall see you again."

CHAPTER II

"This is our ranch."

BEFORE Bill could reply a man's voice called, "Hello, there!" and a tall fellow stepped up to her with cordial mien.

Norcross awkwardly shrank away. This was her cowboy lover, of course. It was impossible that so attractive a girl should be unattached, and the knowledge produced in him a faint but very definite pang of envy and regret.

The happy girl, even in the excitement of meeting her lover, did not forget the stranger. She gave him her hand in parting, and again he thrilled to its amazing power. It was small, but it was like a steel clamp. "Stop in on your way to Meeker's," she said, as a kindly man would have done. "You pass our gate. My father is Joseph McFarlane, the forest supervisor."

"Good night," he returned with sincere liking.

The hotel was hardly larger than the log shanty of a railway grading camp, but the meat was edible, and just outside the door roared Bear creek, which came down directly from Dome mountain, and the young stranger went to sleep beneath its singing that night. He should have dreamed of the happy mountain girl, but he did not. On the contrary, he imagined himself back at college in the midst of innumerable freshmen yelling: "Bill McCoy! Bill McCoy!"

He woke a little bewildered by his strange surroundings, and when he became aware of the cheap bed, the flimsy washstand, the ugly wall paper and thought how far he was from home and friends he not only sighed, he shivered. The room was chilly, the pitcher of water cold almost to the freezing point, and his joints were stiff and painful from his ride. What folly to come so far into the wilderness at this time!

As the eastern youth crawled from his bed and looked from the window he was still further disheartened. In the foreground stood a half dozen frame buildings, graceless and cheap, without tree or shrub to give shadow or charm of line—all was bare, bleak, bare. But under his window the stream was singing its glorious mountain song, and away to the west rose the aspiring peaks from which it came. Romance brooded in that shadow, and on the lower foothills the frost touched foliage glowed like a mosaic of jewels.

Dressing hurriedly he went down to the small barroom, whose litter of duffel bags, guns, saddles and camp utensils gave evidence of the presence of many hunters and fishermen. The slovenly landlord was poring over a newspaper, while a discouraged half grown youth was sludging the floor with a mop. But a cheerful clamor from an open door at the back of the hall told that breakfast was on.

Venturing over the threshold, Norcross found himself seated at table with some five or six men in corduroy jackets and leath boots, who wore, in fact, merchants and professional men from Denver and Pueblo out for fish and such game as the law allowed, and all in holiday mood. They joked the waiter girls and joshed one another in noisy good fellowship, ignoring the slim youth in English riding suit, who came in with an air of mingled meanness and thudily took a seat at the lower corner of the long table.

As he looked about the room the tourist's eye was attracted by four young fellows seated at a small table to his right. They wore rough shirts of an olive-green shade and their faces were wild scorched, but their voices held a pleasant tone, and something in the manner of the laudatory toward them made them noticeable. Norcross later asked her who they were.

"They're forestry boys," "Forestry boys?"

"Yes. The supervisor's office is here, and these boys are his help."

This information added to Norcross' interest and cheered him a little. He knew something of the United States forest service and had been told that many of the rangers were college men. He resolved to make their acquaintance. "If I'm to stay here they will help me endure the exile," he said.

After breakfast he went forth to find the postoffice, expecting a letter of instructions from Meeker. He found nothing of the sort, and this quite disconcerted him.

"The stage is gone," the postmistress told him, "and you can't get up till day after tomorrow. You might reach Meeker by using the government phone, however."

"Where will I find the government phone?"

"Down in the supervisor's office. They're very accommodating. They'll let you use it if you tell them who you want to reach."

It was impossible to miss the forestry building for the reason that a handsome flag fluttered above it. The door being open, Norcross perceived from the threshold a young clerk at work on a typewriter, while in a corner close by the window another and older man was working intently on a map.

"Is this the office of the forest supervisor?" asked the youth.

The man at the machine looked up and pleasantly answered: "It is, but the supervisor is not in yet. Is there anything I can do for you?"

"It may be you can. I am on my way to Meeker's mill for a little outfit. Perhaps you could tell me where Meeker's mill is and how I can best get there?"

The man at the map meditated. "It's not far, some eighteen or twenty miles, but it's over a pretty rough trail."

"What kind of a place is it?"

"Very charming. You'll like it. Real mountain country."

This officer was a plain featured man of about thirty-five, with keen and clear eyes. His voice, though strongly nasal, possessed a note of manly sincerity. As he studied his visitor he smiled.

"You look brand new. Haven't had time to season check, have you?"

"No. I'm a stranger in a strange land."

"Out for your health?"

"Yes. My name is Norcross. I'm just getting over a severe illness, and I'm up here to lay around and fish and recuperate—if I can."

"You can—you will. You can't help it," the other assured him. "Join one of our surveying crews for a week and I'll mellow that suit of yours and make a real mountaineer of you. I see you wear a Sigma Chi pin. What was your school?"

"I'm a 'Son of Elm.' Last year's class."

The other man displayed his fob. "I'm ten classes ahead of you. My name is Nash. I'm what they call an 'expert.' I'm up here doing some estimating and surveying for a big ditch they're putting in. I was rather in hopes you had come to join our ranks. We sons of Elm are holding the conservation fort these days, and we need help."

"My knowledge of your work is rather vague," admitted Norcross. "My father is in the lumber business, but his point of view isn't exactly yours."

"He says 'em, does he?"

"He did. He helped devastate Michigan."

"After me the deluge! I know the kind. Why not make yourself a sort of vicarious atonement?"

Norcross smiled. "I had not thought of that. It would help some, wouldn't it?"

"It certainly would. There's no great money in the work, but it's about the most enlightening of all the governmental bureaus."

Norcross was strongly drawn to this forester, whose tone was that of a highly trained specialist. "I rode up on the stage yesterday with Miss Berle McFarlane."

"The supervisor's daughter?"

"She seemed a fine western type."

"She's not a type; she's an individual. She isn't her like anywhere I've gone. She cuts a wide swath up here. Being an only child, she's both son and daughter to McFarlane. She knows more about forestry than her father. In fact, half the time he depends on her judgment."

Norcross was interested, but did not want to take up valuable time. He said, "Will you let me use your telephone to Meeker's?"

"Very sorry, but our line is out of order. You'll have to wait a day or so, or use the mails. You're too late for today's stage, but it's only a short ride across."

As they were talking a girl came galloping up to the hitching post and slid from her horse. It was Berle McFarlane. "Good morning, Emery," she called to the surveyor. "Good morning," she nodded at Norcross. "How do you and yourself this morning?"

"I'm dispirited in the town."

Berle looked round at the forlorn shops, the irregular sidewalks, the grassless yards. "It isn't very pretty, that's a fact, but you can always forget it by just looking up at the high country. When you going up to the mill?"

"I don't know. I haven't had any word from Meeker, and I can't reach him by telephone."

"I know. The line is short circuited somewhere. But they've sent a man out. He may close it any minute."

"Where's the supervisor?" asked Nash.

"He's gone over to Moore's cutting. How are you getting on with those plots?"

"Very well. I'll have 'em all in shape by Saturday."

"Come in and make yourself at home," said the girl to Norcross. "You'll find the papers two or three days old," she smiled. "We never know about anything here till other people have forgotten it."

Norcross followed her into the office, curious to know more about her. She was so clung to his previous conception of her that he was puzzled. She had the directness and the brevity of phrase of a business man in his opened letters and discussed their contents with the men.

"Truly she is different," thought Norcross, and yet she lost something by reason of the display of her proficiency as a clerk. "I wish she would leave business to some one else," he inwardly grumbled as he rose to go.

She looked up from her desk. "Come in again later. We may be able to reach the mill."

He thanked her and went back to his hotel, where he overhauled his outfit and wrote some letters. His disgust of the town was lessened by the presence of that handsome girl, and the hope that he might see her at luncheon made him impatient of the clock.

She did not appear in the dining room, and when Norcross inquired of Nash whether she took her meals at the hotel or not the expert replied: "No, she goes home. The ranch is only a few miles down the valley. Occasionally we invite her, but she doesn't think much of the cooking."

One of the young surveyors put in a word: "I shouldn't think she would. I'd ride ten miles any time to eat one of Mrs. McFarlane's dinners."

"Yes," agreed Nash, with a reflective look in his eyes. "She's a mighty fine girl, and I join the boys in wishing her better luck than marrying Cliff Belden."

"Is it settled that way?" asked Norcross.

"Yes. The supervisor warned us all, but even he never has any good words for Belden. He's a surly cuss and violently opposed to the service. His brother is one of the proprietors of the Meeker mill, and they have all tried to bulldoze Landon, our ranger over there. By the way, you'll like Landon. He's a Harvard man and a good ranger. His shack is only a half mile from Meeker's house. It's a pretty well known fact that Alec Belden is part proprietor of a saloon over there that worries the supervisor worse than anything. Cliff swears he's not connected with it, but he's more or less sympathetic with the crowd."

Norcross, already deeply interested in the present and future of a girl whom he had met for the first time only the day before, was quite ready to give up his trip to Meeker.

Early on the second morning he went to the postoffice—which was also the telephone station—to get a letter or message from Meeker. He found neither. But as he was standing in the door undecided about taking the stage Berle came into town riding a fine bay pony and leading a blaze faced buckskin behind her.

Her face shone cordially as she called out, "Well, how do you stack up this morning?"

"Tip-top," he answered, in an attempt to match her cheery greeting.

"Do you like our town better?"

"Not a bit! But the hills are magnificent."

"Anybody turned up from the mill?"

"No, I haven't heard a word from there. The telephone is still out of commission."

"They can't locate the break. Uncle Joe sent word by the stage driver asking us to keep an eye out for you and send you over. I've come to take you over myself."

"That's mighty good of you, but it's a good deal to ask."

"I want to see Uncle Joe on business, anyhow, and you'll like the ride better than the journey by stage."

Leaving the horses standing with their bridles reins hanging on the ground, she led the way to the office.

"When further comes in tell him where I've gone and send Mr. Norcross' packs by the first wagon."

"You'd better take my bay," said Berle. "Old Paint here is little national."

Norcross approached his mount with a caution which indicated that he had at least been instructed in range horse psychology, and as he gathered his reins together to mount, Berle remarked:

"I hope you're saddle-wise."

"I had a top session in a riding school," he replied modestly.

Young Landon approached the girl with a low voiced protest. "You oughtn't to ride old Paint. He nearly pitched the supervisor over the other day."

"I'm not worried," she said and swung to her saddle.

The ugly beast made off in a tearing sideways rush, but she skillfully called back, "All set." And Norcross followed her in little admiration.

Eventually she brought her broncho to a halt, and they trotted off together along the wagon road quite comfortably. By this time the count had for gotten his depression, his homesickness of the machine. The valley was again enchanted ground.

After shaking along between some rather sorry fields of grain for a mile or two Berle swung into a side trail "I want you to meet my mother," she said.

The grassy road led to a long one story, half log, half shanty house, which stood on the bank of a small, swift, willow bordered stream.

"This is my ranch," she explained.

He thanked her and went back to his hotel, where he overhauled his outfit and wrote some letters. His disgust of the town was lessened by the presence of that handsome girl, and the hope that he might see her at luncheon made him impatient of the clock.

One Hundred and Three Business Houses Represented—Opera House Filled During Evening.

Traveling in a special train, with the last word in diners, sleepers and club cars, the Grand Rapids wholesalers reached Charlevoix Friday evening at 5:20 and were in the hands of the local business men until after 10 o'clock.

Charlevoix did her part handsomely in all respects save the very essential particular of the weather. The sample dishes up for the benefit of the visitors was the very worst brand kept in stock. It was so cold and rainy that the Furniture City Band cut short its program, the musicians being glad to seek the shelter of their Pullman.

A large fleet of automobiles was in waiting when the train arrived and everyone was provided for in the way of transportation. The procession left the Pere Marquette station within twenty minutes after the train arrived and covered the principal streets of the city, the trip ending on Bridge street, where the wholesalers visited the various business places about the city.

The visitors numbered 103, representing an equal number of Grand Rapids business houses. During the time prior to the opening of the evening's program at the opera house the wholesalers spent their time renewing old acquaintances and making new ones. Many entertained their friends at supper on the train, while others were entertained in the downtown district.

The evening's entertainment at the opera house opened at eight o'clock with several fine selections of music by the Furniture City Band. Practically every seat was filled. R. J. Prendergast, representing the Worden Grocery Co., presided. Alderman George W. Priest, in the absence of Mayor O. E. Wilbur, welcomed the visitors to Charlevoix. This was responded to by Heber A. Knott in behalf of Grand Rapids and City Attorney Lisle Shanahan in behalf of Charlevoix. Lee M. Hutchins was the last speaker on the program, and spoke along the line of commercialism, urging all business men to get together and work as a unit. During the entire program the band rendered splendid selection one of the most pleasing features being the song numbers of George A. Murphy and Hazel Williams Kelly.

Clean Your Chimneys is Warning of Fire Chief

General Resumption of Furnace Operations Means That Unusual Care is Necessary.

General and sudden resumption of furnace and stove operations has brought forth a series of Don'ts from Fire Chief Marshall which, if observed, may mean the salvation of great property loss and even lives.

This advice to Charlevoix folk is along this line:

Don't keep matches in a place accessible to children.

Don't start a fire in the furnace until you have had the chimney examined for accumulations of soot.

Don't permit ashes from the furnace to come in contact with basement partitions or woodwork of any kind.

Don't erect a coal stove too near woodwork unless the woodwork is properly protected by metal or asbestos.

Don't expose gasoline to the air in a room where an open fire is burning.

Don't allow cigar or cigarette stubs to be thrown carelessly in some out of the way corner.

Don't search clothes closets with a lighted match at any time.

Don't Get Mad; Just Pay Up

Don't get on your dignity and swear a little under your breath if the Courier man stops at your house and asks you to pay up, what you owe on your subscription account. Look him square in the eye and say: "Sure I'll settle—ought to have done it when the year was up."

Just keep in mind all the time that it costs a lot of money to run a newspaper; that we have bills to pay and get but thirty days on them; that the pay roll must be met every Saturday night, and there are hundreds of other things that take money.

The Courier management is making an effort this fall to have everyone pay up all arrearages on subscription. Everyone owing eight months or more were sent statements last month. About twenty per cent have called and settled. Its the other eighty per cent that will be called upon personally during the next few weeks. To those who have called and settled, accept our thanks. To the balance who have not called, we are waiting anxiously to have the chance to thank you for settling.

We want to give you a good, newsy paper every issue, but cannot do so if you fail to pay your subscription account.

BOYNE CITY AGAIN WINNERS

Defeats Charlevoix Football Team on Home Grounds Saturday.

One of Snappiest Game Ever Witnessed on Local Gridiron—Score 18 to 7.

In the second encounter of the season, Boyne City, runners up for a place among the title claimers of Northern Michigan interscholastic football championship, defeated the Charlevoix aggregation in one of the snappiest mix-ups ever witnessed on the local gridiron. When the whistle blew its welcome blast just as darkness was settling down over South Side Athletic Park the count stood 18 to 7 with the ball in Charlevoix's possession in mid-field.

The one attractive feature about the whole affair was the manner in which the local men fought to the finish. Two weeks ago Boyne secured the first game during the last half and by the attitude of the visitors there was no doubt in their minds but the process would be repeated in an easier manner than previously. From the opening boot of the ball Charlevoix displayed a fight that has been seen on a local field only occasionally during the past few years, and it was after playing football for the full time that the visitors were able to carry away a scalp. The Charlevoix men might have been out-classed in some of the more elegant tactics of the game, but they were not out played or out fought at any stage of the joust.

It means a fifty cent saving to you to renew your Grand Rapids Press subscription through this office. Read the clubbing offers on page 7. —Adv. 41tf

HARD HIT BY CUPID'S DARTS

Two Popular Charlevoix Young Men Are Married Tuesday.

Peter Donald Campbell, Jr., and Clinjos G. Cooper Wed Popular Young Ladies.

The marriage of Peter Donald Campbell, Jr., of this city and Miss Julia Ida Corlett of Cheboygan, occurred Tuesday at high noon in the Episcopal rectory at Petoskey, Rev. Henry Harris performing the marriage service.

The groom is a well known and popular young man. He was a graduate of the C. H. S. Class of 1908 and later spent two years at the M. A. C. After leaving school he spent several seasons sailing with his father on the Steamer Beaver between Charlevoix and St. James. During the past season he had charge of the Steamer Fannie M. Rose. There are few young men in Charlevoix who has a larger circle of acquaintances and enjoys the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens than Doa.

The bride is a sister of Mrs. Emory Baldwin, and while not a resident of the city, has made a number of close friends while visiting here.

The happy couple were accompanied from this city by Clarence Wood and Miss Blanche Tooley, who acted as bridesmaid and groomsmen at the wedding ceremony. Other members of the wedding party were Mrs. Harvory Campbell and Mrs. Emory Baldwin.

Mr. and Mrs. Campbell left immediately for Holland, where he has accepted a position with the Holland Sugar company and will reside there until early in the spring.

Clinton G. Cooper and Miss Mary I. Kirchner were united in marriage early Tuesday morning in the Catholic church in Saginaw, in the presence of a few relatives and close friends.

The groom is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Cooper and is well and favorably known in this city, where he has lived all his life. At present he is in the government employ, acting as sub-carrier on the city routes.

The bride is well known in the city, having taught school here for several years, filling the position as principal in the grade schools. During her stay in the city she has made a host of friends who are glad to welcome her as a prominent resident.

Mr. and Mrs. Cooper left shortly after the wedding ceremony for a short trip to Detroit and other southern points. They expect to return the first of the week and occupy their well furnished home on Nettleton street.

KILLED WHITE CROW

Freak Bird Laid Low Last Week by a Harbor Springs Marksman.

A white crow was killed north of Harbor Springs Saturday afternoon by Frank Brankfield, a local marksman. The bird will be put on exhibition at his home here where all may view the wonderful specimen and Mr. Brankfield has sent it to Petoskey to have it artistically mounted.

John C. Wright, the Harbor Springs author, is jubilant. A few weeks ago he reported having seen a white crow while out in the forest, and the story was printed in this paper. Immediately people began to shout "nature fakir." John F. Storm, president of the Jim Lewis Fishing and Sporting Club, wrote from St. Louis and wanted to know what brand Wright had been drinking that caused him to see white crows. The latter replied that in spite of all these doubting Thomases there was such a thing as a white crow, just the same as there are white deer, white horses and white elephants. Now he is vindicated. The truth is mighty and will prevail. —Petoskey News.

Johnnie Wright is also some writer. We are in receipt of his book "Stories of the Crooked Tree." While as yet we have not read it, it is stated by those who have to be exceedingly interesting, and shows a marked ability on the writer's part of portray the incidents related in the book. We have known Mr. Wright for some years, and will say that his publications are worthy of a place in every home in the country.

SUPERVISORS NOW IN SESSION

Frank M. House of Boyne Valley Township Chosen as Chairman

Various Committees Named—Matter of Route of New Road Being Alred.

The October session of the County Board of Supervisors opened Monday at the court house, with practically every member present. One of the first acts of the board was the selection of a chairman. But two candidates were in the field and when the balloting was over it was found that F. M. House of Boyne Valley township was the choice of the board.

Outside of the naming of the various committees, little work has been accomplished up to the time we go to press. Tuesday the members of the board were taken to Evelino township to look over the route of the road to be built by the county road commissioners the coming year. There are conflicting opinions as to the route the road should go from what is known as the Fred White corner. Some want it to continue east three-fourths of a mile and then south to the Bird corner.

Others want it to go south from White's corner to the Matt Allen corner, thence east to Bird's corner. The county road commissioners left the matter of route for the supervisors to decide, at a recent meeting. It will be given a hearing on Tuesday of next week.

Following are the committees named by Chairman House:

Pneumonia Takes Well Known Summer Resident Thursday Morning.

W. H. Aldrich, of Chicago, a well known summer visitor died at his cottage on Belvedere avenue at 8:40 Thursday morning, the direct cause of his death being a severe attack of pneumonia.

Mr. Aldrich was one of the best known of the hundreds of summer residents who come to Charlevoix each year. This season he joined his family here in August and was in apparent good health until on Monday, when stricken with pneumonia. He was 69 years of age and for over 25 years he has spent his summers in this city and during this time has made many close friends. He is survived by a wife, two sons and a daughter. The remains were taken to Chicago, Friday for interment.

PLOWING MATCH OCTOBER 21

Annual Event to Be Held This Year at Marion Center Grange Hall.

On Thursday, October 21, the twentieth annual Plowing Match, given under the auspices of the Marion Center Grange, will take place at the hall south of the city. The event is one that is looked forward to each year by not only grangers, but the entire community. It is seldom that the attendance is small, and this year, providing the weather is suitable, one of the largest crowds in the history of the grange is looked for.

Contestants in the plowing match are divided into four classes and liberal prizes are offered to the winners. The plowing takes place in the forenoon, and during the afternoon field sports and other amusement are pulled off.

The chicken dinner, served by the ladies' auxiliary during the noon hour, is one of the drawing cards. At former occasions a dance was held in the hall during the evening, but this year it was finally decided to cancel this form of amusement. It will be noticed that it is stated on the bills that a dance will take place, but regardless of this, it has been decided not to have it.

The advertisement on page 6 of this issue tells the story of the day in detail.

WILL RESIDE IN KANSAS CITY

J. L. Crane, Jr. and Miss Ruth A. Fifield Married Tuesday.

Groom a Graduate of C. H. S. Class 1909—Bride a Vassar Student.

On Tuesday evening of last week at Janesville, Wisconsin, occurred the wedding of Miss Ruth Alden Fifield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Fifield of that city, and Mr. J. L. Crane, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Crane of this city.

The bride was attended by Mrs. Joseph Blake of Oak Park, Illinois, a classmate at Vassar college, and Mr. Percy Crane, brother of the groom, was groomsmen. The bride's gown was of white satin, hand embroidered in pearls and trimmed with Venetian point lace. She carried a shower bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley. After a short wedding trip, the bride and groom arrived in this city on Friday last and visited until Tuesday at the home of the groom, leaving in the afternoon for Kansas City, where Mr. Crane is a civil engineer in the employ of the firm of Burns & McDondell. They will make this city their future home.

The groom is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Crane, Charlevoix's well known dry goods merchant. He is a graduate of C. H. S. class of 1909. The following year he entered the U. of M., taking up civil engineering and graduated four years later with high honors. He is a young man of pleasing personality and will without a doubt make a success of his chosen profession. The bride is a graduate of Vassar college and was quite popular among the younger set of her home town.

They leave Charlevoix with the best wishes of a host of friends.

ALL BOOST FOR THEIR HOME TOWN

Residents of Ellsworth a Solid Unit for Community Building.

Board of Trade Membership Covers Entire District—A Hustling Village.

Did you ever have the opportunity of visiting a community where every resident, from small children to the grown-ups, were boosters with a big "B."

There are hard to find, but nevertheless there is a small village within but a few miles of Charlevoix where every person is a booster. Part of the training of the children is to boost for the home community. Old men, young men, children—talk with any of them and they will make an effort to convince you that their town and their community is the best place in northern Michigan to live. They don't stop at that either, for they tell you that their town has the finest prospects of any in Northern Michigan; that their land is the most productive; that they can raise the biggest crops, and best of all, they have a fine market for their produce.

The village we refer to is Ellsworth, Antrim county, Michigan. The editor of the Courier had the opportunity of being present at a meeting of the board of trade last Wednesday night. It had been many years since he had attended a meeting where the spirit of community building was so evident. The hall was crowded, not only with residents of the village, but farmers and their wives, many who had driven from six to ten miles to attend. They told us that meetings of this nature were regular occurrences in Ellsworth; that their board of trade meetings were looked forward to with great anticipation; that at these meetings the good of the community was the main subject of debate; that it was here that plans were talked over which when completed and put into operation, meant the realization of something for the good of all. Every thought seemed center on the subject: "What can we do to make a better and more prosperous village."

The program opened up with music, followed by short talks from business men and farmers. The business man told what in his opinion, the town needed the most, and suggested various ways by which it could be attained. The farmer voiced his opinion as to what was needed and would be the best for all. There was no great flow of oratory—each spoke along the line of thought that was uppermost in his mind. Suggestions were made in a manner that all could grasp their meaning. And practically every person called upon had some suggestion to make that would make a better and bigger Ellsworth.

They want a canning factory, a sugar factory, a grist mill and a newspaper. They now have good schools, churches, stores, a saw mill, produce warehouse, salting station, creamery, bank and a band of 15 pieces. They got what they now have by going after them, and we believe it is but a short time before they will obtain all they deem themselves lacking. A community endowed with the spirit of progress that has been demonstrated by this thriving little village cannot help but prosper. Just watch Ellsworth grow.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed, it causes a rumbling sound and imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Wooden Posts in Steel Cars.

When composite sleepers are used, such as those manufactured with steel side members and wooden posts, it is essential to see that an ample and absolutely continuous cutting of paint is maintained between the two members because the deterioration of one invariably sets up a corresponding action in the other, the rusting of steel being inevitably accompanied by a rotting of wood which may be in contact with it. EDWARD F. McSweeney, of Boston, chairman of the directors of the port, presented a report at the convention of port authorities which has just been in session at Los Angeles, in which he deals with some features of our export business which have hitherto escaped attention. He regards our present export trade as proceeding under an artificial stimulation, and points out that of the present billion-dollar trade balance in our favor over $700,000,000 are exports solely for war munitions—ammunition, horses, auto trucks, army shoes, foodstuffs, etc.—trade which will cease the instant the war comes to a close. This leaves a balance of only $300,000,000 of exports of what might be termed "regular merchandise"—an export smaller than that of any year since 1909, and almost $200,000,000 less than in the year before the war.

"Comparing the present year of exports from the United States with that of the year before the war, we find we have exported only 32 per cent as much agricultural implements, 52 per cent as much sewing machines and 33 per cent as much steel rails. The most lamentable fact in connection with these figures is that we are losing as much, if not more, to the countries which are not at war as to those which have given up domestic pursuits to take up armed conflict," says the report.

The report continues to say that last year's figures show that our sewing machine export trade in 1915 was only 54 per cent of the 1914 figures, to South America but 20 per cent and to all of Africa, Asia and the Pacific Islands it was but 35 per cent of the previous year.

Our exports of the staple merchandise which we hope to sell under normal conditions after war are smaller by a large percentage in practically everything except war orders, and we are losing our export trade much faster to the neutral countries than to the belligerent ones.

The commissioner of pensions is insistent on having the pension examining boards made up of two Democrats and one Republican. However, we would like to remind him that the pensioners are not made up in this proportion.

It remains to be seen whether the Democrats are going into next year's canvass with the war cry, "He kept us out of war." But it is very certain that the Republicans will assert: "He kept us out of work."

To sustain and soothe the country the government has just reported a bumper crop of Thanksgiving turkeys.

THE man who says that he don't believe in "wasting" money to advertise will never have any to "waste."

ONE pleasant thing about the Rio Grande is that it is not deep enough to accommodate submarines.

One day a pastor was calling upon a dear old lady, one of the "pillars" of church to which they both belonged. As he thought of her long and useful life and looked upon her sweet placid countenance bearing but few tokens of her ninety-two years of earthly pilgrimage, he was moved to ask her: "My dear Mrs. S., what has been the chief source of youth and strength and sustenance during all these years? What has appealed to you as the real basis of your unusual vigor of mind and body, and has been to you an unfailing comfort through joy and sorrow? Tell me, that I may pass the secret on to others, and, if possible, profit by it myself." The old lady thought a moment, then lifting her eyes, dim with age, yet kindling with sweet memories of the past, answered briefly: "Victuals."

A city girl who went to visit relatives in the country, was quite inquisitive. "Say, Uncle Ben, do rabbits make a noise like a dog?" "Oh no. Rabbits, my dear, are practically devoid of vocal powers." "That's odd. My story book says they eat cabbage and bark."

The following note was sent to a Charlevoix teacher by a mother to explain her son's absence from school:

Dear Mum: Please excuse Johnny today. He will not be at school. He is acting as timekeeper for his father. Last night you gave him this example: If a field is four miles square how long will it take a man walking three miles an hour to walk two and a half times around it? Johnny ain't no man, so we had to send his daddy. They left early this morning, and my husband said they ought to be back late tonight, tho it would be hard going. Dear Mum, please make the next problem about ladies, as my husband can't afford to lose the day's work. I don't have no time to loaf, but I can spare a day off occasionally better than my husband can.

Respy yrs,
Mrs. Jones.

"Now, boys, what is the axis of the earth?" "The axis of the earth," said Johnny, "is an imaginary line, which passes from one pole to the other, and on it the earth revolves." "Very good, Johnny," said the teacher. "Could you hang clothes on that line?" "Yes, sir." "Oh, indeed; what sort of clothes may I ask?" "Imaginary clothes, sir."

The following lesson in Socialism is both amusing and instructive: Mike and Pat were two friends—and Democrats. One day Mike learned that Pat had turned Socialist. This grieved and troubled Mike, who said: "Pat I don't understand this Socialism. What is it, now?" It means dividing up your property equally," said Pat. "Tis this way. If I had two million dollars I'd give you a million and keep a million myself—see?" "And if you had two farms, Pat, what would you do?" "I'd divide up, Mike. I'd give you one and I'd keep one." "And if you had two pigs, Pat, would you share those too?" "Now, Mike, you go to thunder. You know I've got two pigs."

Suffrage Notes

"Liberty is in the very air," said the British general when the boys of Boston declared that his soldiers had no right to break the ice in their skating pond. The states that championed the cause of liberty for man in '76 are facing the question of liberty for woman in this year of grace 1915. Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania are to vote this fall on the question whether women are really people.

"What is your position on this question?" asked the advocate of votes for women. The congressman thought a minute and then replied: "Very uncomfortable."—Liberty Bell.

Today there are twelve states where women can vote for president of the United States. At the last presidential election there were only six. This would seem to answer the question, "Is woman suffrage coming or going?"

BADLY BRUISED IN A RUNAWAY

Attorney A. L. Fitch Attempts to Stop Frightened Horses.

Run Over by Dray and Badly Bruised—Team Owned by W. E. Bedwin.

Attorney A. L. Fitch was badly bruised last Thursday forenoon while attempting to stop a runaway team on Bridge street.

The team belonged to W. E. Bedwin, local drayman, and when at the corner of Dixon and Michigan avenue became frightened and came down the hill, over the bridge and continued their mad flight south on Bridge street. Mr. Fitch was opposite the Blanchard Hardware company's store at that time, and seeing the team coming ran out into the street, waving his arms and partially stopped them. However, they paused but a moment and continued down the street. Fitch ran to the side of one of the horses and grabbed the lines and undoubtedly would have succeeded in stopping them if he had not slipped on the wet pavement. The weight of his body threw the horse to its knees, and it nearly tumbled end for end, falling under the tongue of the dray.

When the horse fell it caused the dray to swing aside and before Art could get out of the way, the front wheel struck him just under the arm, passing over him across his shoulders.

He was picked up and taken to the office of Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, where an examination revealed numerous bad bruises, but no broken bones nor serious internal injuries. He was then removed to his home and is now getting along nicely and will soon be able to appear on the streets.

We are of the opinion that in the future should he happen to be in the vicinity of a runaway, he will either climb a telephone pole or get behind a brick building.

see her signature without a tremor. He smiled, but his eyes were despondently sad. "Oh, I'm crazy! I admit it. I didn't know such a thing could happen to me, but it has."

As Wayland listened to this outpouring he wondered at the intensity of the forester's passion. He murmured, too, at Berrie's choice, for there was something fine and high in Landon's worship. A college man with a mining engineer's training, he should go high in the service. "He made the mistake of being too preoccupied as a lover," concluded Wayland. "His forthright courtship repelled her."

CHAPTER IV.

A Warning.

MEANWHILE his own troubles increased. Frank's dislike had grown to an implacable vindictiveness, and if the old man Meeker had any knowledge of his son's activities he gave no sign.

"I don't know why I stay," Wayland wrote to Berrie. "I'm disgusted with the men up here—they're all tire-some except Landon—but I hate to slink away, and, besides, the country is glorious. I'd like to come down and see you this week. May I do so? Please send word that I may."

She did not reply, and, wondering whether she had received his letter or not, he mounted his horse one beautiful morning and rode away up the trail with a sense of elation, of eager joy, with intent to call upon her at the ranch as he went by.

Hardly had he vaulted among the pines when Clifford Belden rode in from his ranch on Hut creek and called at Meeker's for his mail.

Frank Meeker was in the office, and as he both feared and disliked this big contemptuous young cattleman he set to work to make him jealous.

"You want to watch this one lung boarder of ours," he warned, with a grin. "He's been writing to Berrie, and he's just gone down to see her. His highfidelity ways and his fine white hands have put her on the slant."

"I'm not worrying," retorted Belden. "You'd better be. I was down there the other day, and I peered like she couldn't talk of anything else but Mr. Norcross. Mr. Norcross, till I was sick of his name."

An hour later Belden left the mill and set off up the trail behind Norcross, his face fallen into stern lines. Frank writhed in delight. "There goes Cliff, hot under the collar, chasing Nor-ing quite repaid him for his long and tiresome ride.

"I've been wondering about you," she said. "I'm mighty glad to see you. How do you stand it?"

"I did, and I was going to write and tell you to come down, but I've had some special work to do at the office." She took the horse's rein from him, and together they started toward the stables.

This action of stabling the horse, a perfectly innocent and natural one for her, led one of the things, a coarse-minded sneak, to watch them from a corral. "I wonder how Cliff would like that?" he evilly remarked.

Berrie was frankly pleased to see Wayland and spoke of the improvement which had taken place in him. "You're looking fine," she said as they were returning to the house. "But how do you get on with the boys?"

"Not very well," he admitted. "They seem to have it in for me. It's a constant fight."

Her face grew grave. "I reckon you got started wrong," she said at last. "They'll like you better when you get browned up and your clothes get dirty. You're a little too fancy for them just now."

"I don't believe I want any more of their company. What's the use? As you say, I've started wrong with them, and I don't see any prospect of getting right; and, besides, I like the rangers better. Landon thinks I might work into the service. I wonder if I could? It would give me something to do."

She considered a moment. "We'll think about that. Come into the kitchen. I'm cook today. Mother's gone to town."

The kitchen was clean and simple, and the delicious odor of new made bread filled it with cheer. As the girl resumed her apron Wayland settled into a chair with a sigh of content.

"I like this," he said aloud. "There's nothing cowgirl about you now; you're the Anglo-Saxon housewife. You might be a Michigan or Connecticut girl at this moment."

Her cheeks were ruddy with the heat and her eyes intent on her work, but she caught enough of his meaning to be pleased with it. "Oh, I have to take a hand at the pots and pans now and then. I can't give all my time to the service, but I'd like to."

He boldly announced his errand. "I wish you'd take me to board. I'm sure your cooking would build up my shattered system a good deal quicker than your aunt's."

She laughed, but shook her head. "You ought to be on the hills riding hard every day. What you need is the high country and the air of the pines."

She had read that victims of the white plague always talk in this cheerful way about themselves, and she worked on without replying.

"If I were here—in the valley—you and I could ride together now and then, and you could show me all the trails. Why not let me come here and board? I'm going to ask your mother if I may not do so."

"Of course you can come here," she said when she saw he was in earnest. "Mother will be glad to have you, and though our ranch isn't a bit pretty, perhaps father will send you out with one of the rangers as a fireguard. I'll ask him tonight."

"I wish you would. I like these foresters—what I've seen of them. I wouldn't mind serving under a man like Landon. He's fine."

Upon this pleasant conference Cliff Belden unexpectedly burst. Pushing the door open with a slam, he confronted Berrie with dark and angry face.

"Why, Cliff, where did you come from?" she asked, rising in some confusion. "I didn't hear you ride up."

"Apparently not," he sneeringly answered. "I reckon you were too much occupied."

She tried to laugh away his black mood. "That's right, I was. I'm chief cook today. Come in and sit down. Mother's gone to town, and I'm playing her part," she explained, ignoring his sullen displeasure. "Cliff, this is Joe. Mr. Norcross, who is visiting Uncle Joe. Mr. Norcross, shake hands with Mr. Belden." She made this introduction with some awkwardness, for her lover's failure to even say "Howdy" informed her that his jealous heart was aflame, and she went on quickly.

"Mr. Norcross dropped in on his way to the postoffice, and I'm collecting a snack for him."

Recognizing Belden's claims upon the girl, Wayland rose. "I must be going. It's a long ride over the hill."

"Come again soon," urged Berrie. "Father wants to see you."

"Thank you. I will look in very shortly," he replied and went out with such dignity as he could command, feeling, however, very much like a dog that has been kicked over the threshold.

Closing the door behind him, Belden turned upon the girl. "What's that consumptive 'dogie' doing here? He peered to be very much at home with you—too darn much at home!"

She was prepared for his displeasure, but not for words like these. She answered quietly: "He just dropped in on his way to town, and he's not a dogie!" She resented his tone as well as his words.

"I've heard about you taking him over to Meeker's and lending him your only slicker," he went on, "but I didn't expect to find him sitting here like he owned you and the place. You're taking altogether too much pains with him. Can't he put his own horse out? Do you have to go to the stable with him? You never did have any sense about your notions with men. You're all along been too free of your reputation, and now I'm going to take care of it for you. I won't love you unless this runt any longer!"

She perceived now the full measure of his base rage, and her face grew pale and set. "You're making a perfect fool of yourself, Cliff," she said, with portentous calmness.

"Am I?" he asked.

"You sure are, and you'll see it yourself by and by. You've no call to get wire edged about Mr. Norcross. He's not very strong. He's just getting well of a long sickness. I knew a chill would finish him, that's why I gave him my slicker. It didn't hurt me, and maybe it saved his life. I'd do it again if necessary."

"Since when did you start a hospital for eastern tenderfeet?" he sneered, then his tone changed to one of downright command. "You want to cut this all out, I tell you! I won't have any more of it! The boys up at the mill are all talking about your interest in this little whip, and I'm getting the brand-log iron from every one I meet. Sam saw you go into the barn with that dude, and that would have been all over the country tomorrow. If I hadn't told him I'd sew his mouth up if he said a word about it. Of course I don't think you mean anything by this conduct!"

"Oh, thank you," she interrupted, with flaming, quick, judgmental fury. "That's mighty nice of you. I went to the barn to show Mr. Norcross where to stall his horse. I didn't know Sam was here."

He sneered. "No, I let you didn't." She fired at this. "Come now! Something nasty is in your mind. Go on! What have I done? What makes you so hot?"

He began to weaken. "I don't accuse you of anything. I—don't I?"

"Yes, you do—in your heart you distrust me—you just as much as said so!" He was losing his high air of command. "Never mind what I said, Berrie. I—"

She was blazing now. "But I do mind—I mind a whole lot—I didn't think of you," she added as she realized his cheapness, his coarseness. "I didn't suppose you could even think such things of me. I don't like it," she repeated, and her tone hardened.

"And I guess you'd better pull out of here—for good. If you've no more faith in me than that I want you to go and never come back."

"You don't mean that!"

"Yes, I do! You've shown this yellow streak before, and I'm tired of it. This is the limit. I'm done with you."

She stood between tears and benumbing anger now, and he was scared. "Don't say that, Berrie!" he pleaded, trying to put his arm about her.

"Keep away from me!" She dashed his hands aside. "I hate you. I never want to see you again!" She ran into her own room and slammed the door behind her.

Belden stood for a long time with his back against the wall, the heat of his resentment utterly gone, an empty, aching place in his heart. He called her twice, but she made no answer, and so at last he mounted his horse and rode away.

Young Norcross, much as he admired Berrie, was not seeking to exchange her favor for her lover's enmity, and he rode away with an uneasy feeling of having innocently made trouble for himself as well as for a fine, true hearted girl.

"What a good friendly talk we were having," he said regretfully. "And to think she is to marry that big, scowling brute! How could she turn Landon down for a savage like that?"

He was just leaving the outer gate when Belden came clattering up and reined his horse across the path and called out: "See here, you young skunk! You're a poor, white livered tenderfoot, and I can't trust you as I would a full grown man, but I reckon you better not ride this trail any more."

"Why not?" inquired Wayland.

Belden glared. "Because I tell you so. Your sympathy hunting game has just about run into the ground. You've worked this only dodge about long enough. You're not so altogether sick as you put up to be, and you'd better hunt some other cure for loneliness or I'll just about cure your chest in."

All this was shockingly plain talk for a slender young scholar to listen to, but Norcross remained calm. "I think you're unnecessarily excited," he remarked. "I have no desire to make trouble. I'm considering Miss Berrie who is too blue to be worried by us."

His tone was conciliating, and the cowboy, in spite of himself, responded to it. "That's why I advise you to go. She was all right till you came Colorado's a big place, and there are plenty other fine ranges for men of your complaint. Why not try Routt county? This is certain, you can't stay in the same valley with my girl I serve notice of that."

"You're making a prodigious ass of yourself," observed Wayland, with calm contempt.

"You think so, do you? Well, I'll make a jack rabbit out of you if I find you on this ranch again. You've worked on my girl in some way till she's just about quit me. I don't see how you did it, you mean little pun, but you surely have turned her against me!" His face burst into flame as he thought of her last words. "If you were so much as half a man I'd break you in two pieces right now, but you're not. You're nothing but a dead on the hoof lunger, and there's nothing to do but run you out. So take this as your final notice. You straddle a horse and head east and keep a-riding, and if I catch you with my girl again I'll deny you a whole barrel of misery. Now that's right!"

Thereupon, with a final glance of hate in his face, he whirled his horse and galloped away, leaving Norcross dumb with resentment, interminuted with wonder.

"Truly the west is a dramatic country! Here I am involved in a lover's wrath and under sentence of banishment all within a month! Well, I suppose there's nothing to do but carry out Belden's orders. He's the boss," he said as he rode on. "I wonder just what happened after I left? Something morbid evidently. She must have given him a sharp rebuff or he wouldn't have been so furious with me. Perhaps she even broke her engagement with him. I sincerely hope she did. She's too good for him."

And so from point to point he progressed till, with fine indignation, he reached a resolution to stay and meet whatever came. "I certainly would be a tinorous animal if I let myself be scared into flight by that big lunge-head," he said at last.

Nevertheless he felt very weak and very much depressed as he rode up the street of the little town and dismounted at the forest service building.

Everybody Should Turn Out

cross. If he finds out that Berrie is interested in him he'll just about wring that dude's neck."

Meanwhile Wayland was riding through the pines with lightning heart, his thought dwelling on the girl at the end of his journey.

As he reached the McFarlane ranch it seemed deserted of men, but a faint column of smoke rising from the roof of the kitchen gave evidence of a cook, and at his knock Berrie came to the door with a boyish word of frank surprise and pleasure. She was dressed in a blue and white calico gown, with the collar turned in and the sleeves rolled up, but she seemed quite unembarrassed, and her pleasure in his com-

Saving Fish After Floods.

"One of the most important lines of work carried on by the fisheries branch of the government," said an official, "is the rescue of food and game fishes from the overflooded lands in the Mississippi valley. After the floods subside shallow pools are left that are wholly disconnected from the streams, and in these the fishes gradually perish as the drying of the pools progresses. By sending men to seine these pools the government each year saves and returns to public waters hundreds of thousands of valuable fishes."

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1915

PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

APPEALS TO BEAN GROWERS

Efforts Made to Set Price and Not Speculate on Product.

Advised to Avoid Crowding Market as If Done Price Will Fluctuate.

J. M. McBride, secretary of the Michigan Bean Growers' association sends out the following on reference to the recent meeting of that association at Flint and the action of the Bean Jobbers' Association.

The Convention of Bean Growers at Flint represented the principal bean growing sections of the state. The unanimous opinion of crop conditions was that even with the most favorable weather the remainder of the season that not to exceed one third of a normal crop was possible measured in salable stock. Frost in the northern portion of the state and with the continued wet weather, anthracnose and blight have made the most disastrous season in the state's history of bean growing. There is no appreciable stock of beans of last year's crops nor will there be any of the staple foods cheap as potatoes were last year. By no means can the actual cost of the crop of beans for 1915 be realized by the masses of growers. The problem then is to minimize the season's losses and maintain a price that will move the crop as needed for consumption.

The convention of growers adopted the following minimum price scale for the bean crop of 1915: October, $3.00; November, $3.10; December, $3.20; January, $3.30; and after that an advance of five cents for each month of the marketing season. The object of this monthly advance is to accomplish the purpose of preventing dumping beans on the market faster than the trade can handle and also provide a reasonable incentive for the grower to carry his crop and be compensated for shrinkage, interest and carrying charges. To the buyer the market will be advancing to cover the items just named. Bean buying will be a merchandising business rather than a speculative one.

This plan was presented to the Bean Jobbers' Association at Ann Arbor and the general plan of co-operative action in marketing was endorsed. The actual prices were not agreed to nor opposed for legal reasons as well as the uncertainties of crop conditions the remainder of the season. The answer made as to price was that this year it was wholly up to the grower. Conservative marketing would maintain prices, while crowding beans on the market would demoralize prices. All figures of crop costs, food values and market prices of foods this year would make bean values above the minimum prices named.

The dangers to price maintenance based on the above conditions comes from the possibilities of speculators who may have sold futures and from growers crowding beans on the market too fast. Growers will be advised that beans are too high for consumption. To this it may be answered that there were $3.00 beans last year on double the crop of this season, and also that the Belgian Relief Commission figured $3.00 beans as the cheapest food that could be bought last year.

As a business proposition consult your banker on price maintenance and financing the crop in your hands as well as after leasing. The interest on one bushel of beans at $3.00 per bushel is less than 2 cents per month. This with some shrinkage still allows a safe margin for conservative marketing. On the other hand do not all over stay the market. This method of marketing the bean crop has the approval of the U. S. Division of Markets and on the language of an exclusive bean buyer, "It's up to the farmer to make the market price for beans."

MANY WERE THERE

Friends Surprise Mrs. C. Y. Cook and Did Her Farewell.

A company of ladies met at the home of Mrs. Alton Wood, Thursday afternoon of last week, as a little surprise for Mrs. C. Y. Cook who has left Charlevoix to spend the winter with her sisters in Ann Arbor and Jackson. Every one who knows Mrs. Cook and especially those who have known her for forty years, love her and will miss her. She is always in her seat at the church. She speaks of others only to praise them, thereby showing her christianity. About twenty ladies met to say good by and bid her God speed. The spirit of fun was quite prevalent, and the idea of finding out the ages of these "gay young things" possessed one of the company. Eleven had passed the three-score and ten and several others were dangerously near it. There were ten widows and it was a jolly company. All hope to see Mrs. Cook back home in the spring feeling younger and stronger.

LEFT MONDAY FOR CHICAGO

Dr. A. F. McGreevy to Enter Employ of U. S. Government.

Will Be One of the Government Veterinaries With a Salary of $1400 a Year.

After spending the past six months building up a lucrative practice in this vicinity, Dr. A. F. McGreevy left Monday morning to accept a position tendered him on Tuesday of last week, by the United States Bureau of Animal Industry.

Dr. McGreevy will be located in Chicago and reported for work on the 20th. The appointment came entirely unsolicited, and was received with considerable surprise. He will be one of about 1500 veterinaries situated in various cities in the United States, in the employ of the government. The salary connected with his new appointment will be $1,400, with a substantial increase each year.

He came to Charlevoix last April, directly after graduating from the Grand Rapids Veterinary College. During the few months he has been in the city he has been considered a live wire and built up a good practice, not only in Charlevoix, but in the neighboring towns. He was a candidate for the position as county veterinarian, about to be made by the county board of supervisors, and friends in touch with the situation predict that he would have been the selection of the board.

We have been informed that his practice will within the next week be taken up by Dr. N. D. Snell of Strum, Wisconsin, also a graduate veterinary of the same school.

During his short stay in the city, Dr. McGreevy has acquired a large circle of acquaintances all of whom wish him the best of success in his new field of work.

LOST A HARD FOUGHT GAME

Harbor Springs Put it Over Home Team by Score 13-0.

Team Crippled in First Half of Game—Players Distinguish Themselves.

Because one Ed. Krulick by name sustained an injury during the first of Saturday's game with Harbor Springs, which forced him to the side lines and out of the fracas, Charlevoix high was compelled to acknowledge the Harbor men superior on the first gridiron encounter of the season between the two schools. The final count was 13-0, two touchdowns and a goal after touch down being responsible for the score. This is not saying that those who finished the job did not put up a good quality of football, but Krulick was the mainstay in the open style of play and after his retirement, Quarter-back Hallett was forced to erase any forward passes from his list and depend on the old army game. Krulick was examined upon reaching home and it was found that his collar bone was fractured. He will be out of the remaining games on the schedule. This is the second accident of this nature that has occurred this season.

The Harbor Springs aggregation is probably one of the most formidable in this part of the state and possesses several real stars. The noticeable trouble was the lack of speed, which would have been "nuts" for Charlevoix in the open style of play but for the aforesaid accident. Wilson, Harbor's full back, was the big and consistent ground gainer for the home team, netting 20 yard runs, each ending in a touch down. Outside of this man none of the Harbor players gained regularly against the Charlevoix defense.

For Charlevoix Usher, Durance, Butler, Krulick distinguished themselves both on the defensive and offensive. Probably as good an exhibition of real backing the line seen in these parts by a man as light as Durance, was shown during the last quarter of the game. Charlevoix held the ball in mid field, but by repeated and successful drives by Percy, which netting anywhere from five to fifteen yards, the ball was carried to the ten yard where time was called. Another minute and Charlevoix would have scored and practically through the ability of Durance's 130 pounds to penetrate the Harbor's big line. On end runs Usher out-shown any with the exception of Wilson and raised his stock one hundred per cent. He was fast, picked his holes in good style and fought to the end. Usher's end runs netted as much ground as any formation during the contest and the way he displayed foot ball instinct sort of fooled some of the skeptical ones. Butler playing his last game owing to parental objection, didn't make a poor pass during the whole affair, while on defense he worked hard and broke through the enemy's line time after time. Butler burned his toga after the game. The squad will miss him as he was a consistent man for the pivot job and was regularly at his post.

The game started with Charlevoix kicking off to Harbor, who returned the ball twenty yards. During the first quarter the ball exchanged hands repeatedly on punts and holding for downs, but along near the last few minutes a backward pass to Wilson and a run of forty yards brought the score up to six points for the Harbor, a try at a goal failing. Before the quarter closed Charlevoix carried the ball within dangerous territory but was held for downs and the ball went over and was booted out of danger.

In the fourth quarter Wilson got away again for another sprint on practically the same formation as the first run, and ran through an open field dumping Durance and Hallett at his feet on the way and boosting Harbor's count up to 13 points after driving the ball over the bar on the attempt at goal. With six minutes to play Charlevoix started in to retrieve herself and after receiving the kick off marched right down the field on her way to glory only to be stopped by the whistle after a brilliant showing of fast and heady playing. It was the old time reason they waited too long and lost a game they could have had if they had started that real fighting spirit about four quarters earlier. The game closed with the ball in Charlevoix's possession on Harbor's ten yard line and every man working his hardest for at least a touch down.

Although the boys were defeated, they had one of the best trips of the season and are loud in their praise of the "enemy" and the treatment they were accorded while at the Harbor. While there the fellows were shown through the new high school, a pleasure which they certainly enjoyed.

SHOULD RAISE SUGAR BEETS

Present Season Should Be a Lesson to Farmers of County.

Practically Every Crop a Failure in County With the Exception of Sugar Beets.

The absolute necessity of farmers sowing a crop that is frost proof and rain proof has never before been as plainly demonstrated in Charlevoix county as it has been during the past year.

Potatoes, beans, buckwheat, cucumbers, peas and corn will be practically a failure this season. Frost during the latter days of May and early in June nipped practically everything just as it appeared about the ground, and the late frost ruined what was left before it had a chance to mature. In the meanwhile cold weather and heavy downfalls of rain retarded all growth, until crops located in the few sections that were out of the frost belt and escape the freeze, will amount to about one-half the general average.

In the eastern part of the state, from Gaylord south to Bay City, the farmers had not only the rain and frost to contend with, but thousands of acres of beans were ruined by blight. In regards to this, however, Charlevoix county has been less afflicted with blight than any part of the state. In central and southern counties, great trouble was had in harvesting wheat, oats and rye, and today thousands of bushels of potatoes are rotting in the ground.

The only crop that will help farmers in this section through the winter and assist in meeting their obligation is the sugar beets. We have been informed that an acreage of between 450 and 500 hundred acres have been planted in Charlevoix county the present year. This is nearly double that planted last year, and the year 1916 will see a large acreage than the present one.

When has there been a year in Charlevoix county when the beet crop was a failure? Where is there a crop that is a safer investment than the beet crop? What crop can the farmer plant and know to a cent what he will realize for his season's work other than the sugar beet? Beet growers are guaranteed the price per ton before crop is planted. This year they will receive $6.00 per ton. Last year it was $5.50 and the year before—practically the same. And still there are many in Charlevoix county who will depend almost entirely on their potato crop, and, as a general average, have a poor market three out of five years.

The season of 1915 is a lesson to farmers in regards as to what too depend upon. The farmers this year who have the beet acreage will be the only ones to make a dollar, and seven out of ten seasons the result will be the same. Let this season be a lesson that will not be forgotten and get in line—be a sugar beet grower. Be ready and in line to take a large acreage each year and if we should be fortunate enough again to have a sugar factory locate here, not only give them the acreage they want, but your moral and financial support.

SCHNODEN GOES ASHORE

Bound from St. James to Traverse City With a Cargo of Lath.

The barge Schnoden from St. James, Beaver Island, bound for Traverse City with a load of lath went aground last Thursday night, during the heavy fog which settled over the bay about seven-thirty. After several attempts to float the boat, help was sent for and Captain Emery went to the scene with the steamer Pe-to-se-ga and after lightening the cargo, succeeded in again floating the barge which was able to proceed to its destination apparently none the worse for its experience.

"PEEPING TOM" AT WORK

Residents on Antrim and Clinton Streets Being Annoyed by Night Peepers.

Charlevoix has a "Peeping Tom." During the past month residents on Antrim and Clinton streets have been annoyed by some person whose curiosity is so great and morals so degenerated that he makes nightly visits about this neighborhood, peeping into windows and frightening women folks almost into hysteria.

His last operations took place last Wednesday night between the hours of seven and eight o'clock at various places on Clinton street near the park, and on the following evening about the same time on Antrim street in the vicinity of C. S. Dodge's store.

In both instances he was seen peeking into windows, but managed to escape when pursued. Other sections on the west end of town report nightly visits of the prowler off and on during the summer months. Some claim they can identify him if brought face to face, but as yet have not had this opportunity.

About the best way to treat a scoundrel of this character is to lay for him with a loaded shot gun. You'll get him sooner or later, and when the chance comes, give him a charge of shot that knock the desire to snoop around entirely out of him.

IS SPOKEN OF AS A GENIUS

Byron W. King to Present Opening Number of Lecture Program.

Program This Season Will Be As Good if Not Better Than in Former Years.

The opening number of the Charlevoix Lecture Course will take place at the Charlevoix Theatre, on Thursday evening of this week, when that noted lecturer, Byron W. King will appear on the platform.

Byron W. King is spoken of as a genius, a man of highest rank in his profession and while the topic he will speak upon is not known for a certainty, it is thought to be on some Shakespearean presentation.

Mr. King is at the head of a school of oratory, elocution and dramatic culture, located at Mt. Oliver, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. Among his staff of teachers are some of the best known educators in the country. He is also a writer of some note, his latest production being "Under the Shadows" and other poems.

Following this number of the lecture course, the Ricardi Fadetts will appear on the evening of November 15. Their program consists mostly of musical numbers, and they are spoken of as excellent entertainers.

The citizens of Charlevoix are urged to purchase season tickets at a cost of only $1.50, which cover the entire program. In former years the lecture course has been all that could be asked for and this year it will be exceptionally good, and deserves a liberal support.

The Ladies of the Baptist church will hold a rummage sale, commencing October 25, in the vacant store north of the Ferguson House. Adv. 421f.

ROAD SCRAPS TAKE UP TIME

Route of New Road Through Eveline Township Still in the Air.

$50,983.25 Spent on Roads Built During 1913-14—Other Work Done by Supervisors.

Considerable time has been taken up by the board of supervisors during the past week in an effort to settle, up matters pertaining to the location of roads. At the hearing Tuesday afternoon, as to the route of the proposed road in Eveline township mentioned last week, the board by a vote of 18 to 7 decided that the road should be built over what is termed the upper route, running from the White corner south to the Matt Allen corner, thence east to Bird's corner. Petitions had been circulated by both factions and the signers were plenty.

It will be remembered that the county road commissioners recommended the lower route, but put the matter up to the board of supervisors, when they saw the trouble ahead of them. They claimed that the cost of building of the lower road was less than that of the upper, and therefore recommended that way. However, residents along the upper way protested against this route, and the scrap was soon going full blast.

It must be understood, however, that it is within the power of the county road commissioners to designate the route of a new road. They have full power to do this, in spite of any action of the board of supervisors. All the board of supervisors can do is to refuse to raise money for road building purposes. The board of supervisors referred the recommendation back to the road commissioners for further consideration. What the outcome will be is problematical.

County roads constructed during the years 1913-14 have cost the tax payers $50,983.25. A two mill tax has been recommended to continue the work. The action taken by the board to force prisoners to work on the roads during their confinement is a good one. A good many dollars in labor can be saved by adopting this method. It will also probably have the effect of the county having less prisoners to board.

B. R. Hendle of Manistee appeared before the board in behalf of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, and told of the good work that has been accomplished. Regardless of this, the board tabled the proposition to donate toward its upkeep.

The Charlevoix County Agricultural Society was given $600.00 to help in their work. County School Commissioner Stewart told the board that in her opinion a county that could not afford a typewriter for their school commissioner did not deserve a strict attention to business on the commissioners part. The board seemed to agree with her and the county clerk was instructed to purchase one at once.

The report of the poor commissioners showed that during the last year it cost the county $14,250.36 to take care of its poor. This is higher than in former years, but some of the increase is due to the widow's pension law now in force. As we go to press the board are about to elect a new member on the board on account of A. E. Cross of East Jordan, not being able to continue as a member. There are several candidates and the result will be announced next week.

Grant Slocum Stands By the Small Town

Gleaners Head and Editor Says Farmer and Merchant Must Stand or Fall Together.

"I have come to realize that the interests of the business men on both sides of the town or village line are pretty much the same. It has finally been driven home to me that the value of my farm and the value of the farm life is measured largely by the growth and prosperity of the nearest town!" said Grant Slocum, founder of the Gleaner & Business Farmer, in a recent address.

Farmers and their wives and families owe the nearest store their trade, every penny of it, but only when that local merchant has shown his desire to co-operate with the farmer and has helped make the town worthy of the farmers' trade. Every town that has two stores or more ought to provide a rest room, with toilet conveniences for the accommodation of the people from out of town who come in to trade. In most small towns, and big ones, too, I find that the only place, the mother can make changes for her baby or care for her own personal wants is in the wash room of the local hotel, where the sign "For Guests Only" stares her in the face. The only place the men folks can rest or warm up is in the saloon or the idle billiard parlor, with their too-willing welcome!

"I want to see a welfare committee composed of an equal number of representative business men and farmers in every town. They will bring the rest room and, sooner or later, the farmers' owned elevator, which also must come, if the merchant wants his store in the center of a prosperous farming community, because if the money the market-gamblers take out of his neighborhood were spent in his home town, no local merchant would ever need to worry.

"Give our farmers good trading centers, good stocks of the best merchandise, sold at fair prices, bright stores, clean stocks, courteous clerks and the inferior quality cheap mail-order catalogue houses will not take a dollar out of your community."

Hallowe'en Comes on Sunday This Year

Pranks of the Boys and Girls Will Probably Be Celebrated Saturday Night.

Someone's always extracting all the joy out of life for the kids. This time it is the demon statistician who has looked ahead at the calendar and has made the discovery that Hallowe'en this year falls on Sunday.

The night before All Saints day, which occurs annually on Nov. 1st, has been given over this country to the playing of practical jokes and youthful pranks on unsuspecting neighbors, but of late years the "sport" has degenerated, the very younger generation taking delight in soaping windows as the grown-ups took in carrying their neighbor's gates a few miles or turning over someone's barn.

Even "tie-tack" has been almost forgotten, the more innocent Jack-o-lantern taking its place.

It is not believed that the officers will permit of the old time celebration to be held on Sunday evening, but it is not thought that objection can be raised to a sane observance of the celebration on Saturday night. They have been particularly vigilant of late years for the rougher element but have turned their backs on the perpetrators of the more innocent amusements. This year will be no exception but a close watch will be kept on all law violators. Hallowe'en parties will this year be held on Saturday evening and already plans for several are under way. In many countries it forms a time for fireside meetings and is very generally observed, while in this country the percentage of grown ups who celebrate is very small.

Old Folks Saved From Suffering

Mrs. Mary A. Dean, Taunton, Mass., in her 87th year, says: "I thought I was beyond the reach of medicine, but Foley Kidney Pills have proven most beneficial in my case."

Mr. Sam A. Hoover, High Point, N. C., writes: "My kidney trouble was worse at night and I had to get up from five to seven times. Now I do not have to get up at night, and consider myself in a truly normal condition, which I attribute to Foley Kidney Pills, as I have taken nothing else."

Mrs. M. A. Bridges, Robinson, Mass., says: "I suffered from kidney ailments for two years. I commenced taking Foley Kidney Pills ten months ago, and though I am 61 years of age, I feel like a 18-year-old girl."

Foley Kidney Pills are tonic, strengthening and up-building, and restore normal action to the kidneys and in a disordered and painful bladder. They act quickly and contain no dangerous or harmful drugs.

ENDORSED AT HOME

Such Proof as This Should Convince Any Charlevoix citizen.

The public endorsement of a local citizen is the best proof that can be produced. None better, none stronger can be had. When a man comes forward and testifies to his fellow-citizens, addresses his friend and neighbors, you may be sure he is thoroughly convinced or he would not do so. Telling one's experience when it is for the public good is act of kindness that should be appreciated. The following statement given by a resident of Charlevoix adds one more to the many cases of Home Endorsement which are being published about Doan's Kidney Pills. Read it.

Henry Newman, 203 Sheridan St., Charlevoix, says: "I have been troubled for years by my kidneys. I was annoyed by too frequent passages of the kidney secretions at night and I also had backache. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got a box at the Ivy Drug Store. They gave me great relief. I can now rest better and I don't have much backache."

COUNTY NORMAL

(Florence Milner.)

Tuesday evening the normal class enjoyed a wienner and marshmallow roast on the beach. The social events of the class are always enjoyable and this one was not an exception.

Mr. Dwight L. Wilson, a former principal of the high school, gave an interesting talk on Wednesday morning.

Mr. Wilson told us of many of the former high school graduates who have "made good" in the world and thus would have us realize the value of an education and the importance of improving every minute of school time.

Miss Anna Metcalf, a graduate of the class of 1903, visited the normal Wednesday morning. Miss Metcalf is teaching the Woodward school in Hudson township near Vanderbilt. She has eleven pupils, including one eighth grader. She reports that the condition of her school is very good, the equipment including a school library, maps and a Waterbury heating system. Miss Edna Srigley called at the normal Wednesday afternoon. Miss Srigley was a graduate of the class of 1911 and is now teaching the Hopyard school in Hayes township. She reports that she has an enrollment of nineteen pupils including four eighth graders and two in the chart class. Miss Srigley enjoys her work very much, but tells us that experience is indeed the best teacher.

County Commissioner Stewart was a welcome visitor at the normal on Monday. Miss Stewart gave the class a very interesting talk on rural school problems and conditions. The normal students should all be inspired to work and improve every opportunity given during the year. Miss Stewart promises to stand by the normal students in all their lines of work, and the class should strive to be worthy of the recommendations that Miss Stewart gives them.

at $162,000,000, have been released from embargo and will be landed in this country. As a consequence $65,000,000 of good American money will go to Europe to pay the workers and furnishers of material. The same Santa Claus who brings the toys here will take the money there. All of which would not be at all unfortunate were it not for the fact that there are plenty of people in these United States ready and anxious to make articles entirely suitable for Christmas gifts. It is estimated that every dollar spent for labor is turned over ten times a year.
The laborer pays his grocery bill, the groceryman pays the wholesaler, the wholesaler pays the manufacturer, the manufacturer pays for his labor and materials, the factory employe buys a suit of clothes, the clothing merchant pays the money to his clerk, the clerk buys a theatre ticket, the theatre manager pays the actor, who in turn, spends the money for board and clothes.
Thus the money goes on its mission, for giving profitable employment to an endless chain of individuals. But if that dollar is sent to Europe, it renders its service to an endless chain of Europeans instead of an endless chain of Americans.
And that makes some difference. The difference constitutes the reason for a protective tariff.

FRANKLIN Pierce, a Democrat, sat in the White House during the Crimean War. "He kept us out of war." Was he re-elected because he did no more than his simple duty? He was not.
His party didn't even renominate him.

We wonder, yes, we wonder how on earth President Wilson found time to go a courtin' with all these foreign

Mexican, tariff and other questions raising old Ned around the White House all the time.

Three Bells School.

Twenty-six pupils of the "Three bells School" received certificates for perfect attendance during the first month of school. This is a common thing for many of these pupils to arrive at the school-house by the time the first bell rings or soon after and take their seat and go to work. One morning twenty-eight entered the room between the first and last bells and twenty-seven of that number took their seats and began work and were still at work when the last bell rang.
We wish the children of the county would get the habit.

Society, presented an electric table to Mrs. Lalonde, who is the church organist. A silver mounted casserole was the gift of the Cecilians and other gifts were made by personal friends.

APPLES WILL KEEP

In Northern Michigan as Well as Any Place in the Country.

The theory advanced by some people that northern Michigan apples will not keep any length of time was exploded Thursday, when Ney Smith brought to the Courier office several samples of last fall's apples found in the basement on the farm owned by G. E. Dutton, on the Norwood road.

Smith was working in the basement of the house and upon looking into a box, found about a peck of Tallman Sweeties that had been stored the previous fall. The apples were slightly withered, but otherwise in good condition. They had been overlooked when the cellar had been cleaned in the spring and had been in the barrel since that time.

Several of them are now on exhibition at this office, to prove the truth of the above statement. We have had many samples of cold storage apples but there is little difference between them and the apples brought in by Mr. Smith.

mencing October 25 and lasting throughout the week in the vacant building son is on we'll live on the country Can you fish?"

"Just about that," he laughed. "Good thing you didn't ask me if I could catch fish." He was recovering his spirits. "It will be great fun to have you as instructor in camp school. I seem to be in for all kinds of good luck."

They both grew uneasy as time passed for fear something or some one would intervene to prevent this trip which grew in interest each moment, but at last the supervisor came out and mounted his horse, the pack poles fell in behind, Berrie followed, and the student of woodcraft brought up the rear.

CHAPTER VI.

In Camp.

FOR several miles they rode upward through golden forests of aspens. On either hand rose thick walls of snow white boles, and in the mystic glow of their gilded leaves the face of the girl shone with unearthly beauty.

Twice she stopped to gaze into Wayland's face to say, with husht intensity: "Isn't it wonderful? Don't you wish it would last forever?"

Her words were poor, ineffectual, but her look, her breathless voice, made up for their lack of originality. Once she said: "I never saw it so lovely before. It is an enchanted land!" with no suspicion that the larger part of her ecstasy arose from the presence of her young and sympathetic companion. He, too, responded to the beauty of the day, of the golden forest as one who had taken new hold on life after long illness.

Meanwhile the supervisor was calmly leading the way upward, vaguely conscious of the magical air and mystic landscape in which his young folk flashed as if on wings, thinking busily of the improvements which were still necessary in the trail and weighing with care the clouds which still lingered upon the tallest summits, as if debating whether to go or to stay. He had never been an imaginative soul and now that age had somewhat dimmed his eyes and blunted his senses he was pliedly content with his path. The rapture of the lover, the song of the poet, had long since abandoned his heart. And yet he was not completely oblivious. To him it was a nice day, but a "weather breeder."

"Don't you wish it would last forever?"

"I wonder if I shall ever ride through this mountain world so unmoved as he seems to be?" Norcross asked himself after some faring prosaic remark from his chief. "I am glad Berrie responds to it."

At last they left these lower, won drous forest aisles and entered the unbroken cloak of firs whose dark and silent depths had a stern beauty all their own.

The horses began to labor with roar ing breath. A dozen times he thought, "We must be nearly at the top," and then other and far higher ridges sud denly developed. Occasionally the su pervisor was forced to unsling an ax and chop his way through a fallen tree, and each time the student harried to the spot, ready to aid, but was quite useless.

"One of the first essentials of a ran ger's training is to learn to swing an ax," remarked McFarlane, "and you never want to be without a real tool. I won't stand for a batchet ranger."

The sky was overshadowed now and a thin drizzle of rain filled the air. The novice hastened to throw his raincoat over his shoulders, but McFarlane rode steadily on, clad only in his shirt sleeves, unmindful of the wet. Berrie, however, approved Wayland's caution. "That's right; keep dry," she called back. "Don't pay attention to father, he'd rather get soaked any day than unroll his slicker. You mustn't take him for a model yet awhile."

He no longer resented her sweet go helude, although he considered him self unentitled to it, and he rejoiced under the shelter of his fine new coat. He began to perceive that one could be deflected against a storm.

After passing two depressing narrows, they came to a hillside so steep, so slippery, so dark, so forbidding, that one of the pack horses balked, shook his head and reared furiously, as if to say, "I can't do it and I won't try." And Wayland sympathized with him. The forest was gloomy and cold and apparently endless.

After coaxing him for a time with ad mirable gentleness, the supervisor, at Berrie's suggestion, shifted part of the load to his own saddle horse, and they went on.

Wayland, though incapable of com plaint, so great was the demand upon his lungs, was not too tired to admire the power and resolution of the girl, who seemed not to suffer any special inconvenience from the rarefied air. The dryness of his open mouth, the throbbing of his troubled pulse, the roaring of his breath, brought to him with increasing dismay the fact that he had overlooked another phase of the ranger's job. "I couldn't chop a hole through one of those windfalls in a week," he admitted, as McFarlane's hand again liberated them from a fall en tree.

He was beginning to be hungry also—he had eaten a very early breakfast—and he fell to wondering just where and when they were to camp, but he endured in silence. "So long as Berrie makes no complaint my mouth is shut," he told himself. "Surely I can stand it if she can." And so struggled on.

Up and up the pathway looped, crossing minute little boggy meadows on whose bottomless ooze the grass shook like a blanket, descending ravines and climbing back to dark and muddy slopes. The forest was drip ping, green and silent now—a mys terious menacing jungle.

"I'm glad I'm not riding this pass alone," Wayland said as they paused again for breath.

"So am I," she answered, but her thought was not his. She was happy at the prospect of teaching him how to camp.

At last they reached the rugged edge of timber line, and there, rolling away under the mist, lay the bare, grassy, upward climbing naked neck of the great peak. The wind had grown keener moment by moment, and when they left the storm twisted plines be low its breath had a watery nip. The rain had ceased to fall, but the clouds still hung densely to the loftiest sum mits. It was a sinister yet beautiful world—a world as silent as a dream, and through the short, thick grass the slender trail ran like a fluid serpent.

"Now we're on the divide," called Berrie, and as she spoke they seemed to enter upon a boundless Alpine plain of velvet russet grass. "This is the Bear Tooth plateau." Low monuments of loose rock stood on small ledges, as though to mark the course, and in the hollows dark ponds of icy water lay, half surrounded by masses of compact snow.

"This is a stormy place in winter," McFarlane explained. "These piles of stone are mighty valuable in a bliz zard. I've crossed this divide in Au gust in snow so thick I could not see a rod."

Half an hour later they began to de scend. Wind twisted, storm bleached dwarf plines were first to show, then the firs, then the blue green spruces, and then the sheltering depths of the undeposited forest opened, and the roar of a splendid stream was heard. But still the supervisor kept his resolute way, making no promises as to dinner, though his daughter called: "We'd bet ter go into camp at Beaver lake. I hope you're not starved," she called to Wayland.

"But I am," he replied so frankly that she never knew how faint he really was. His knees were trembling with weakness, and he stumbled dangerously as he trod the loose rocks in the path.

They were all now now descending swiftly, and the horses reaped down the trail with expectant haste, so that in less than an hour from timber line they were back into the sunshine of the lower valley, and at 3 o'clock or thereabouts they came out upon the bank of an exquisite lake, and with a cheery shout McFarlane called out: "Here we are, out of the wilderness!" Then to Wayland, "Well, boy, how did you stand it?"

"Just middling," replied Wayland, red from weariness and with joy of their camping place.

With businesslike certitude Berrie unsaddled her horse, turned him loose and lent a skillful hand at removing the panniers from the pack animals, while Wayland, willing, but a little un certain, stood awkwardly about. Under her instruction he collected dead branches of a standing fir, and from these a few cones kindled a blaze, while the supervisor tumbled the horses and set the tent.

One by one the principles of camping were taught by the kindly old ranger, but the hints which the girl gave were quite as valuable, for Wayland was eager to show her that he could be and intended to be a forester of the first class or perish in the attempt.

McFarlane went further and talked freely of the forest and what it meant to the government. "We're all green at the work," he said, "and we old chaps are only holding the fort against the thieves till you youngsters learn how to make the best use of the do main."

Berrie was glowing with happiness. "Let's stay here till the end of the week," she suggested. "I've always wanted to camp on this lake, and now I'm here I want time to enjoy it."

"We'll stay a day or two," said her father, "but I must get over to that ditch survey which is being made at the head of Poplar, and then Moore is coming over to look at some timber on Porcupine."

The young people cut willow rods and went wading at the outlet of the lake with prodigious success. The water rippled with trout, and in half an hour they had all they could use for supper and breakfast, and behold, even as they were returning with their spoil they met a covey of grouse strolling leisurely down the lake's edge. "Isn't it a wonderful place?" exclaimed the happy girl. "I wish we could stay a month."

"It's like being on the Swiss Family Robinson's island. I never was more content," he said fervently. "I wouldn't mind staying here all winter."

"I would," she laughed. "The snow falls four feet deep up here. It's like there's snow on the divide this minute, and camping in the snow isn't so funny. Some people get snowed in over at Deep lake last year, and dear all their horses started before they could get them out. This is a nice old place in winter time."

As the sunset came on the young people again lolled down to the water's edge, and there, seated side by side on a rocky knoll, watched the phantom gold light from the willows and climb slowly to the cliffs above, while the water deepened in shadow and busy muskrats marked its glossy surface with long silvery lines. Mischievous camp birds peered at the couple from the branches of the pines, uttering satirical comment, while squirrels, frankly insolent, dropped cones upon their heads and lurked in saucy glee.

Wayland forgot all the outside world, forgot that he was studying to be a forest ranger, and was alive only to the fact that in this most bewitching place, in this most wonderful hour, he had the companionship of a girl whose eyes sought his with every new phase of the silent and wonderful scene which shifted before their eyes like a noise less yet prodigious drama.

At last the girl rose. "It is getting dark. I must go back and get sup per."

"We don't need any supper," he pro tested.

"Father does, and you'll be hungry before morning," she retorted, with sure knowledge of men.

He turned from the scene retri butant ly, but once at the campfire cheerfully gave his best efforts to the work in hand, seconding Berrie's skill as best he could.

The trout, deliciously crisp, and some potatoes and butter cakes made a meal that tempted even his faint appetite, and when the dishes were washed and the towels hung out to dry deep night possessed even the high summit of stately Parmelian.

McFarlane then said, "I'll just take a little turn to see that the horses are all right, and then I think we'd better close in for the night."

When they were alone in the light of the fire Wayland turned to Berrie. "I'm glad you're here. It must be awfully tame to camp alone in a wilder ness, and yet, I suppose, I must learn to do it."

"Yes, the ranger often has to camp alone, ride alone and work alone for weeks at a time," she assured him. "A good trailer don't mind a night trip any more than he does a day trip, or if he does he never admits it. In the snow, darkness, are all the same to him. Most of the boys are fifteen to forty miles from the postoffice."

"He smited ruefully—I begin to have new doubts about this ranger business. It's a little more vigorous than I thought it was. Suppose a fellow breaks a leg on one of those high trails."

"He mustn't!" she hastened to say. "He can't afford really to take reckless chances; but, then, father won't expect as much of you as he does of the old stagers. You'll have plenty of time to get used to it."

McFarlane, upon his return gave some advice relating to the care of horses. "All this stock which is ac customed to a barn or a pasture will quill you," he warned. "Watch your bronchos. Put them on the outward side of your camp when you bed down and pitch your tent near the trail, then you will hear the brutes if they start back. Some men let their stock all up, but I usually picket my saddle horse and hobble the rest."

It was a delightful hour for school bus, and Wayland would have been content to sit there till morning listen ing, but the air bit, and at last the supervisor asked: "Have you made your bed? If you have turn in I shall get you out early tomorrow." As he saw the bed he added: "I see you've laid out a bed of boughs. That shows how eastern you are. We don't do that out here. It's too cold in this climate, and it's too much work. You want to hug the ground—if it's dry."

The twenty youth went to his couch with a sense of timorous elation, for he never before slept beneath the open sky.

After the supervisor had rolled him self in the blanket, long after all sounds had ceased in the tent, there still remained for the youth a score of manifold excitements to wakefulness till at last he fell into an uneasy slumber.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one cure for deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; one cause of this is caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Hat.

The modern hat can be traced back to the petasos worn by the ancient Romans when on a journey, and hats with brims were also used by the earlier Greeks. It was not until after the Roman conquest that the use of hats began in England. A "bottle of blower" about the middle of the twelfth century, was worn by one of the nobles of the land. Froissart describes hats and plumes which were worn at Edward's court in 1340, when the Garter order was instituted. The merchant in Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales" had on his head a Flanders beaver hat, and from that period on ward there is frequent mention of "felt hatters."

PROMINENT WOMEN OF MICHIGAN

MISS ANNA M. WEST.

MRS. ALBERTA V. DROELLE.

Miss Anna M. West, twenty-three years ago, organized the Woman's Benefit Association of the Macabees. On October 22, the cornerstone of a beautiful $200,000 home office building for the society will be laid with great ceremonies at Port Huron.

Miss West is a Michigan woman. She began her work on October 1, 1892, with no members and no funds. To day there are over 186,000 women enrolled in membership, and the re serve fund of the society reaches nearly the nine million dollar mark. She has signed away with her own hand over twelve millions of dollars in benefits.

Mrs. Alberta V. Droelle, of 411 St. Aubin Avenue, Detroit, is the great commander for Michigan, and she is to be congratulated on the success she has attained for the society in this State.

Members from all parts of the State are taking a great interest, and nearly every review will be represented. A class of candidates numbering 500 will be presented to Miss West from Detroit alone, at the large public meeting to be held the evening of October 22, at Macabees Temple, Port Huron.

Suffrage Notes

Washington officials are lining up as "suffrage fans" following the lead of President Wilson, Secretary of War Garrison, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Secretary of Commerce Redfield, Secretary of Labor Wilson and the president's private secretary Tamm, have all publicly declared they will vote for the suffrage amendment in their respective states in November.

A laughable situation has developed in New York in connection with the campaign there. Speakers against the suffrage amendment have used the traditional argument that women ought not to have the ballot because women's place was the home and they ought to stay there. Some of the suffrage workers said, "Very well. The women of New York will stay at home where you say they belong. A day will be agreed upon and every woman will stay at home on that one day." Then an uproar of protest arose in city and state. It was impossible, unthinkable. It would be a crime. One editor called it a "lawless scheme." Newspaper and business men said it was too dangerous to discuss. If women stenographers, clerks, teachers (21,000 in New York city alone), factory workers, telegraph and telephone operators, should stay at home for just one day business would be paralyzed. Not only would New York suffer but the whole country would be affected. The suffragists said, "O, very well. Then just put this out-of-date argument way back on the shelf and let us never hear it again." And the anti-suffragists murmured, meekly, "Never again."

"If you think she knows as much As the steerage Turk and such Let her vote.
If you think she is as good As the hurglar brotherhood Let her vote.
If she's more deserving than Any bun or hold up man Let her vote.
You do not bar out the thug, Or the anarchist bug, Or the gin mill ugly-mug; Let her vote."

Woman's Journal.

I have never heard an argument against woman suffrage that was not an insult to the intelligence of a ten-year-old. —Hon. John D. Long.

Electricity from the Air.
A well-known inventor Julian Velasco Blanco of Madrid has succeeded in extracting electricity from the atmosphere by means of antennae and other apparatus. The antennae were mounted in pairs upon a wooden tower thirty-three feet high erected upon a high hill. Senior Velasco's apparatus received electricity at a pressure of 6,000 volts, which was transformed down to 150 volts. Fifteen lamps in a house were easily lit and maintained at full pressure during the prolonged test.

Charlevoix Grange.

The Charlevoix Grange will meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Romeo Emery, Friday evening, October 22. The presence of every member is wanted at this meeting.

Pomona Grange.

The regular meeting of Pomona Grange will be held with Peninsular Grange on Thursday, November 18. Other than the regular business, the election of master and other officers takes place at this meeting. It is the desire of all interested to have a large attendance.

Harmony Grange.

While Harmony Grange news has not appeared in your paper for some time, the grange has not been idle by any means. We have held three picnics and bees at our "hall site" and accomplished much in preparation for the building of a new hall next year. Tables, and seats have been built, grove cleared out, road made, several loads of stone and gravel drawn and a good share of the excavating for cellar made. We also have a new 73 foot well.

The ladies too have been active in various ways, getting money together for use in building. We have received several additions to the membership this summer, held regular meetings with business done promptly and lecture hour well filled with discussions, music, recitations, readings and special features, nearly every member present taking part in the program. We sent a full delegation to the County Convention. We also won 2nd prize on the vegetable exhibit at the County fair, and the fair committee has already begun making plans to take the prizes next year.

Altogether we have been pretty busy doing things and have many things in mind which we hope to accomplish in the coming year.

We would like to hear what other granges are doing and will welcome visitors from other granges at any time.

We now hold our meetings on the 1st and 3rd Friday evenings of each month.

W. C. T. U. MEETING

Ladies Entertained at Home of Mrs. Connor Friday October 8.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union held with Mrs. Nellie Connor south of town Friday, October 8th, was well attended, considering the inclemency of the weather. Mr. Hooker provided several rigs to take the ladies with their baskets of good things.

President Alcox presided. The meeting opened with singing the invocation, after which Miss Caroline Miller, our newest member, gave a most excellent Bible reading on prayer. This was followed with prayer by Mrs. Taggart. Solo by Mrs. Correll, "His Eye is on the Sparrow." The following delegates to the district convention, to be held in Mancelona the latter part of October, were elected: Mrs. Alexander, Mrs. Arnold, Mrs. Taggart, Miss Miller and Mrs. Wilkinson.

Following the business session came the program which was in charge of Miss Agnes Rodger. The topic was "Tuberculosis Prevention." The reading subjects were taken from "Public Health," published by the Michigan State Board of Health. The readings brought out several facts concerning this dread disease, among them that it is in a large measure a preventable disease. After it has been contracted it can in many cases, be cured if proper care and treatment are used. Intemperance, self indulgence and bad habits are leaders to the disease and feeders of it. Sunshine and out of doors life, with plenty of fresh air are necessary to a cure, as likewise cleanliness, etc.

One member was secured. Everybody seemed to enjoy the social time and potluck which followed the program. The table fairly groaned with the good things it contained and if there was no groaning of those who partook of the feast it was not because there was not enough to satisfy the appetite.

The long winter nights will soon be here and you will need something to break the monotony of the cold whistling wind.

PLOWING MATCH WELL ATTENDED

Members of Marion Grange to Be Congratulated on Event.

Over Two Hundred Present—Marion Won Over Evelyn in Tug o' War.

A better day as far as weather is concerned could not have been selected for the Marion Center Grange Plowing Match than Thursday of last week. The sky was clear and the sun shone from early dawn to night. Teams began to arrive by eight o'clock in the forenoon, and those taking part in the plowing were soon busy at work. By noon between two and three hundred were at the hall, awaiting their opportunity to get in on the excellent chicken dinner served by the ladies auxiliary of the grange.

After the ravenous appetites of the hungry crowd had been appeased the afternoon's program was begun. The first on the program was a tug of war between Ironton and Marion teams, in which the Marion bunch were the winners. Following this other athletic sports were pulled off with the following results:

100 yard dash, won by Frank Courier. 50 yard dash, for ladies, Francis Olak, winner.

Brice Black caught the greased pig after an exciting chase.

In the ladies tug o' war the All-Stars won over the County Normal's.

In the four events of the plowing match, the following persons were awarded prizes as listed below:

- Sod—Class 1.
1st prize, Henry Black.
2nd prize, William Hunter.
3rd prize, William Escott.

HELPED HER CELEBRATE

Mrs. B. L. Harrington Entertains in Honor of Her Daughter's Birthday.

Mrs. B. L. Harrington entertained about ten young people last Thursday evening in honor of her daughter, Beatrice, the occasion being her 18th birthday. One of the stunts that caused great amusement and fun were the place cards used for the occasion. They were pictures of each individual guest taken when they were little tots, and all had to be able to identify their partner from the baby pictures. After refreshments, games and music furnished the entertainment for the balance of evening.

G. R. Wholesalers Appreciate Reception Given

Courier Receives Acknowledgment for Courtesies Extended Them on Recent Visit.

Acknowledgment of the cordial greeting extended the Grand Rapids Wholesalers on the occasion of their recent visit to Charlevoix was received at this office last week, from Assistant Secretary Lee H. Bierce of the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce, as follows:

Grand Rapids, October 15, 1915.
Editor of the Charlevoix Courier:
The Tenth Annual Extension Tour of the wholesale department of the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce, held on the 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th of this month, was a very successful event. In fact, some of the members are of the opinion that it was the most successful tour of the ten.
Much of this success can be directly attributable to the co-operation which DISCONTINUE Y. M. C. A.

Hard Times Causes People to Hang on to Their Money.

After a most diligent canvass of the three towns in the county supporting the county Y. M. C. A. the committee found themselves still short quite a sum and so have decided to suspend operations for 1915-16.

The committee has a deficit of about $900.00 to make up and the donors of this year will be asked to allow a portion of their subscription to apply on the deficit inasmuch as the money was all used in the work.

More than 700 boys came in direct touch with the Y. M. C. A. work and much good has been done and much will develop in later years from the seed sown during the last three years.

The same number subscribed as in former years but could not pay as much as formerly owing to the frosts and hard times. The work is wholly non-sectarian and undenominational and has deserved all the support that has been given in the past.

HAVE ADDED TWO PAGES

Courier Has Increased Size of Paper to a Ten-page Issue.

Ellsworth Board of Trade Secures Needed Newspaper Co-operation for Community.

In this week's issue it will be noticed that the Courier management has increased the size of the Courier to a ten-page paper. The added Ellsworth section has opened up with a vim, thus allowing the Courier to enter into the homes of a great many more people and consequently enables its management to cover a large field of news and subscription territory.

On pages eight and nine will be found the advertising of the merchants of the hustling village as well as the local news happenings of that place and surrounding territory. The two pages are like a newspaper in themselves and at once will show the enterprising manner in which the town of Ellsworth is after the publicity and advertising for its own locality.

The increase in the circulation will be a great help to Courier advertisers, as it will enable their advertising to reach more families and their friends, thus attracting a greater field for business men and farmers to place their goods into the hands of the consumer.

SUPERVISORS COMPLETE WORK

Valuation of Charlevoix County Placed by Board at $11,759,619.

County Tax Will Amount to Five Mills and State a Fraction Under Three.

The board of supervisors completed their work Saturday afternoon, after hearing the balance of the committee reports and adopting several resolutions.

The board placed the valuation of the county at $11,759,619. Taxation for the coming year will be as follows: Road tax, 2 mills; county, 5 mills and the state will amount to a fraction under three mills. At present the county is broke and the board recommended that $20,000 be borrowed from the various banks of the county to make up the shortage in meeting past obligation and to meet expenses up to the first of the year.

On Wednesday of last week, the day set for the election of superintendents of the poor to fill the place of A. E. Cross, whose term had expired, Herman Goodman of East Jordan was chosen. Several candidates were in the field, but the choice made seems to meet with the general approval of the residents of the county.

Allen T. Greenman of Boyne City was selected as school examiner. After looking over the matter of the road controversy near the Vosburg hill in Norwood township, the board decided that they would take no action and the road will remain the same as heretofore.

Resolutions were passed authorizing the hiring of an expert to go over the vaults in the offices of the judge of probate and county treasurer, to ascertain their condition as to being fire and burglar proof.

The county clerk was also given authority to dispose of the lots owned by the county on Huribut avenue, also to dispose of surplus wood.

One of the last acts of the board was in regard to the location of the proposed new road in Eveline township. It was the opinion that the road in question should be built on what is called the upper route, and money to the amount of $6,728 was appropriated for the building. It will be remembered that the county road commissioners recommended the lower road and put the question as to location up to the board of supervisors. The result of the scrap is that the road will be either built on the upper route or no road at all. The money was appropriated for use on the upper road and cannot be used for any other place.

Appropriations of various amounts were also made for the proposed road routes in Commissioner Lorch and Hipp's territory.

THE BEST WAY TO DISINFECT

Five Rules to Observe in Cleaning Out Stables and Premises.

Extreme Care Demanded in the Use of Mercury—Good Advice to Farmers.

In any outbreak of infectious disease among animals thorough disinfection of the premises is essential to preventing the spread of the contagion. Certain substances, such as fresh slaked lime or unsalted lime in powder form, chloride of lime, carbolic acid, corrosive sublimate, formalin, formaldehyde gas, and compound solution of cresol possess the power of destroying bacteria with which they come in contact. To make the use of such substances of value, however, the work must be done with the utmost thoroughness. Careless disinfection is probably worse than none, for it merely serves to give a false sense of security.

In the disinfection of stables and premises the following directions should be carefully observed:

1. Sweep ceilings, side walls, stall partitions, floors, and other surfaces until free from cobwebs and dust.
2. Remove all accumulations of filth by scraping, and if woodwork has become decayed, porous, or absorbent, it should be removed, burned, and replaced with new material.
3. If the floor is of earth, remove 4 inches from the surface, and in places where it shows staining with urine a sufficient depth should be replaced to expose fresh earth. All earth should be replaced with earth from an uncontaminated source.

HOW TO SELECT YOUR SEED BEANS

Growers Must Select Clean Seed Thus Avoiding Loss From Disease.

Pick Out Only Pods That Are Free From Spots and Thrash Separately.

Bean growers who would avoid a repetition next year of the heavy losses from disease suffered this season are advised by the experts to give their personal attention to the immediate selection of a stock of seed beans free from disease infection. They should select the seed beans in the pod and not after threshing.

They should simply pick the pods that are free from all spots, save, and thrash separately. The planting of infected seed is primarily responsible for the troubles experienced. Weather conditions greatly influence the subsequent development of disease, but clean seed on clean land will go far toward giving a clean crop even in a season like the present, which has been exceptionally favorable to the development of disease and unfavorable to the growth of the bean crop.

Two bean diseases are commonly prevalent, anthracnose and bacterial blight. Both attack and spot the pods, penetrate them, and enter the beans, remaining dormant over winter under the seed coats, where they can not be reached by disinfectants.

When the beans are planted these diseases attack the young seedlings, causing a root rot and blighting of stem and leaves, and if the weather is cool and wet they spread again to the pods. Bacterial blight is conveyed by wind and other means to a greater extent than anthracnose and is less easily controlled, but clean seed and crop rotation will give best results. Old bean ground should not be replanted next year.

As far as possible each farmer should save his own seed from his own farm. Beans have been so generally affected by disease that the farmer should not rely on ordinary so-called northern-grown seed or elevator stock for planting. If he has to buy seed, he should make certain that it has been selected from disease-free pods. Examine all thrashed seed carefully, and if it shows suspicious spots or other evidence of disease it should not be used. Home selection, also, will tend to build up a strain adapted to the locality and better than seed brought from a distance.

A survey just completed shows that there are fields in all parts of the bean States where clean pods, or even plants with all the pods clean, may be found, though some fields are hopelessly affected. The farmer who expects to continue bean growing—and this valuable crop should not be abandoned because of this year's discouraging experience—should pick enough clean pods to plant his next crop, or at least a large seed plot. These should be shelled by hand and carefully stored. If the quantity is small, it would be well to plant by hand two beans every 12 or 15 inches in ordinary row in a separate seed plot. There should be organized effort on the part of county agents, bean dealers, and community leaders to have all available clean seed saved for local use and not sold with the general crop. This must be done before the beans are thrashed.

KING MADE GOOD

Lecturer Greatly Pleased His Audience Thursday Evening.

On Thursday evening of last week Byron W. King, the veteran lecturer, made decisive hit with the audience, the event being the first number of the season's lecture and entertainment course. The people who are shy of a "lecture" or who are to listless mentally to follow a speech, had a big surprise sprung on them when they failed to hear the opening number. They have heard nothing but commendations for Mr. King, and it was without a doubt one of the best entertainments of its kind that has been offered here in years.

Mr. King proved to be much more than a mere lecturer and kept his audience amazed by his ability to drive home old and well known truths in new and original ways. His humorous sayings were a riot of fun and his pathos hit the tender heart-strings of his hearers. It is generally conceded that if Mr. King visits this city again he will draw a capacity house.

CELEBRATED HER 70TH BIRTHDAY

Lady Maccabees Invade Home of Mrs. James H. Adams.

Occasion Long to Be Remembered by the Hostess—Combination Dinner Feature of Day.

Mrs. J. H. Adams of Marion township will have occasion to remember October 25th, 1915, her seventieth birthday, in more ways than one.

On Monday last, the date mentioned, about thirty Lady Maccabees and other friends left Charlevoix in bus loads and automobiles for her pleasant farm home for the purpose of helping her celebrate the occasion.

After all had arrived a pleasant hour was spent visiting and extending congratulations to the hostess. As the noon hour approached the visitors produced well filled baskets prepared in advance for the noon feast. However, Mrs. Adams had also made preparations for the noon meal, and when the merry crowd were seated, the table fairly groaned under the weight of the good things loaded upon it. In fact, it was more like a Thanksgiving dinner, as Mrs. Adams had prepared roast turkey and the good things that go with it, and with this and the variety brought by the invading mob, made a dinner "fit for the king bees" who were quite conspicuous by their absence.

At the close of the feast, Mrs. Emily Blodgett, in a few well chosen words, presented Mrs. Adams in behalf of the assembled Lady Bees, a beautiful bath robe.

Mrs. Adams has been a member of the order for 20 years and at one time was one of its most active members. On her 70th anniversary she begins to her old age claim, amounting to $100.00 a year.

The afternoon was spent visiting and sewing until about four o'clock, when the visitors departed for their homes, feeling that the day had been a most happy one.

The following ladies were present: Mesdames Henry Black, Elizabeth Miller, Emily S. Blodgett, Louise Ulrich, Clara Todd, Clara Gregory, R. Withers, Caroline Ranger, Phoebe Ross, Rosina Straw, Anna E. Pierce, Anna Ager, Etta Harrington, Annie Cartier, Lydia Alcock, Lena Cram, Sylvia Smith, Mary Cowan, Zelma Withers, Mary E. Miller, Elizabeth G. Emrey, Minnie Smith, Marion Smith, Carrie Thompson, Ella Usher, Ella E. Tillotson and Miss Jennie Black.

THE BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

Rev. L. C. Vinyard Organizing Boys of City—Progressing Rapidly.

Work Is to Be Commended and Deserves Everyone's Heartly Co-operation.

With the initial meeting of the new organization of boy scouts at the Baptist church Monday night, Rev. Lloyd C. Vinyard laid before the group of boys present the plans, carefully compiled, to begin the work. The attending lads showed great enthusiasm and more than 60 have already enrolled. The main object of the boy scout movement is to interest all boys in and around Charlevoix, regardless of religious affiliations. The present enrollment is composed of boys ranging in ages from 12 to 22 years.

A big mass meeting will be held in the high school assembly room every week and at this meeting a literary program will be given. One of our home business men or professional men will speak on subjects of special interest to boys and the community. More than 20 business and professional men have willingly volunteered to take part in the programs as arranged.

The following list of men will have charge of the different branches of the work as noted:

Scout Master—Rev. Lloyd C. Vinyard. Assistants—Herbert Taggart, Leo Carey and William Sanford.

Troop Committee of Citizens—Charles Carey, A. J. Usher and Will C. Bellinger.

Willard A. Smith will instruct the scouts in the methods of drill and camp life.

W. A. Ewing volunteered his services as athletic director and has been unanimously elected by the boys. W. A. Vogt will act as assistant to Mr. Ewing.

Superintendent H. A. Craig will be tendered the presiding chair at all the meetings. The next meeting will be held in the Baptist church next Monday night, beginning promptly at seven o'clock. Every boy who is interested is invited to attend and enroll. Scout Master Vinyard says that he intends to make this work with the boys a social, moral, mental and spiritual movement and asks the co-operation of everyone.

The organization is a progressive movement to keep the youth busy, providing a place where he can go and enjoy clean and wholesome amusement and not have to loaf about places where he should not be. Amusements that will entertain boys in every stage of life will be provided and this in itself is a step far beyond the County Y. M. C. A. and should be commended as well and strongly supported.

WILL COMPLETE ROAD

Boyer City, Gaylord & Alpena Railroad to End at Alpena.

On Tuesday of last week the directors of the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce voted a resolution favoring the early completion of the Boyne City, Gaylord & Alpena Railroad to Alpena. They have appointed a committee to push the work as fast as possible.

This action is in response to a concerted demand by the Grand Rapids wholesalers and retailers who are enthused over the prospects of opening up a new country from which wealth will be carried.

The road is within twelve miles of completion now and Alpena has offered substantial aid toward the last link.—Boyer Citizen.

State Auto Tax to Arrive by March First

Money to Arrive in Time for County to Use for the Summer's Road Building Work.

Charlevoix county officials were elated at the news from Lansing that the county will receive its share of the automobile tax money about March 1, or in time for use in building roads during the summer months.

A conference of the state treasurer, the state highway commissioner, the secretary of state, attorney-general and the auditor-general will be held soon at which these officials are going to give the Newell Smith automobile tax law, passed by the 1914 legislature, the "once over."

The law sends 50 per cent of the fees collected back to the counties where autos are owned. As the bill was drawn there was no time specified for making the payments, but July 1 was suggested to the legislature. That body for some reason or other selected January 1, and now the various counties are kicking because they will not get the money due from the 1915 licenses until January 1917.

The law says that the money shall be paid back January 1, "or as soon thereafter as possible."

The conference is to decide that "as soon thereafter as possible" means March 1, or thereabout, so that the counties can have the money and spend it during the summer when they need it.

Grateful Mothers Tell Experiences

Mrs. T. Neureuer, Eau Claire, Wis., writes: "Foley's Honey and Tar Compound cured my boy of a very severe croup after other remedies had failed. Our milkman cured his children of whooping cough."

"I recommend it to every one, as we know from our own experience that it is a wonderful remedy for coughs, colds, croup and whooping cough."

Mrs. D. Gilkeson, Youngstown, O., writes: "My little girl had a severe cold and coughed almost continuously. I tried lots of cough remedies, but she didn't get any better. My sister recommended Foley's Honey and Tar Compound to me. The first dose I gave her relieved the inflammation in her throat, and after using one bottle the cough left her."

This sterling old remedy has been in use for years and is just as efficient for adults as for children. It gives relief for irritated and tickling throat, tight and sore chest, croup and bronchial coughs.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range
By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

he's coming down the slope he'll be here in an hour, although that trail is a tolerably tough proposition this minute. A patch of dead timber on a dark night is sure a nuisance even to a good man. He may not make it."

"Couldn't I rig up a torch and go to meet him?"

She put her hand on his arm. "You stay right here," she commanded. "You couldn't follow that trail five minutes."

"You have a very poor opinion of my skill."

"No, I haven't, but I know how hard it is to keep direction on a night like this, and I don't want you wandering around in the timber. Esther can take care of herself. He's probably sitting under a big tree smoking his pipe before his fire—or else he's at home. He knows we're all right, and we are. We have wood and grub and plenty of blankets and a roof over us. You can make your bed under this fly," she said, looking up at the canopy. "It beats the old bison as a roof. You mustn't sleep cold again."

"I think I'd better sit up and keep the fire going," he replied heroically. "There's a big log out there that I'm going to bring in to roll up on the windward side."

"It'll be cold and wet early in the morning, and I don't like to hunt kindling in the snow," she said. "I always get everything ready the night before. I wish you had a better bed. It seems selfish of me to have the tent while you are cold."

CHAPTER VIII.

The Walk in the Rain.

ONE by one, under her supervision, he made preparations for morning. He cut some shavings from a dead, dry branch of fir and put them under the fly and brought a bucket of water from the creek, and then together they dragged up the dead tree.

Had the young man been other than he was, the girl's purity, candor and self reliance would have coquetted him, and when she withdrew to the little tent and let fall the trail barrier between them she was as safe from intrusion as if she had taken refuge behind gates of triple brass. Nothing in all his life had moved him so deeply as her goldfaded, her sweet trust in his hour, and he sat long in profound meditation. Any man would be rich in the ownership of her love he admitted. That he possessed her pity and her friendship he knew, and he began to wonder if he had made a deeper appeal to her than this.

"Can it be that I am really a man to her," he thought, "I who am only a poor wandering whom the rain and snow can appeal?"

Then he thought of the effect of this night upon her life. What would Clifford Belden do now? To what deeds would his huge descent if he should come to know of it?

Berrie was serene. Twice she spoke from her couch to say: "You'd better go to bed. David can't get here till to-morrow now."

"I'll stay up awhile yet. My boots aren't entirely dried out."

After a silence she said: "You must not get chilled. Bring your bed into the tent. There is room for you."

"Oh, no, that isn't necessary. I'm standing it very well."

"You'll be sick!" she urged, in a voice of alarm. "Please drag your bed inside the door. What would I do if you should have pneumonia tomorrow? You must not take any risk of a fever."

The thought of a sheltered spot, of something to break the remorseless wind, overcame his scruples, and he drew his bed inside the tent and rearranged it there.

"You're half frozen," she said. "Your teeth are chattering."

"I'll be all right in a few moments," he said. "Please go to sleep. I shall be snug as a bug in a moment."

She watched his shadowy motions from her bed, and when at last he had nestled into his blankets she said: "If you don't lose your chill I'll lend a rock and put it at your feet."

He was ready to cry out in shame of his weakness, but he lay still till he could command his voice, then he said: "That would drive me from the country in disgrace. Think of what the fellows down below will say when they know of my cold feet!"

"They won't hear of it, and, besides, it is better to err on the side of caution than to be laid up with a fever."

knowledge that his words of endearment had deeply moved her she softly said, "Good night."

He heard her sigh drowsily there after once or twice, and then she slept, and her slumber radiated in him his sense of guardianship of responsibility. Lying there in the shelter of her tent, the whole situation seemed simple, innocent and poetic. But looked at from the standpoint of Clifford Belden it held an accusation.

"It cannot be helped," he said. "The only thing we can do is to conceal the fact that we spent the night beneath this tent alone."

In the belief that the way would clear with the dawn, he, too, fell asleep, while the fire sputtered and smoked in the still mountain wind.

The second dawn came slowly, as though crippled by the storm and walling back by the clouds.

With a dull ache in his bones, Wayland crept out to the fire and set to work fanning the coals with his hat, as he had seen the supervisor do. He worked desperately till one of the embers began to angrily sparkle and to smoke. Then, slipping away out of earshot, he broke an armful of dry fir branches to heap above the fire, charred logs. Soon these twigs broke into flame, and Berrie, awakened by the crackle of the pine branches, called out, "Is it daylight?"

"Yes, but it's very dark daylight. Don't leave your warm bed for the dampness and cold out here. Stay where you are. I'll get breakfast."

"How are you this morning? Did you sleep?"

"Fine."

"I'm afraid you had a bad night," she insisted, in a tone which indicated her knowledge of his suffering.

"Camp life has its disadvantages," he admitted, as he put the coffee pot on the fire. "But I'm feeling better now. I never tried a bird in my life, but I'm going to try it this morning. I have some water-bentling for your bath." He put the soap, towel and basin of hot water just inside the tent flap. "Here it is. I'm going to bathe in the lake. I must show my hardihood."

When he returned he found the girl full dressed, alert and glowing, but she greeted him with a touch of shyness and self consciousness new to her, and her eyes veiled themselves before his glance.

"Now, where do you suppose the supervisor is?" he asked.

"I hope he's at home," she replied quite seriously. "I'd hate to think of him camped in the high country without bedding or tent."

"Oughtn't I to take a turn up the trail and see? I feel guilty, somehow. I must do something."

"You can't help matters any by hoofing about in the mud. No, we'll just hold the fort till he comes. That's what he'll expect us to do."

He submitted once more to the force of her argument, and they ate breakfast in such intimacy and good cheer that the night's discomforts and anxieties counted for little.

"We have to camp here again tonight," she explained demurely.

"Worse things could happen than that," he gallantly answered. "I wouldn't mind a month of it, only I shouldn't want it to rain or snow all the time."

"Poor boy! You did suffer, didn't you? I was afraid you would. Did you sleep at all?" she asked tenderly.

"Oh, yes, after I came inside; but, of course, I was more or less restless expecting your father to ride up."

"That's funny. I never feel that way. I slept like a log after I knew you were comfortable. You must have a better bed and more blankets. It's always cold up here."

The sunlight was short lived. The clouds settled over the peaks, and ragged wisps of gray vapor dropped down the timbered slopes of the prodigious amphitheater in which the lake lay. Again Berrie made everything snug while her young woodsman toiled at bringing logs for the fire.

At last fully provided for, they sat contentedly side by side under the awning and watched the falling rain as it splashed and sizzled on the sturdy fire. "It's a little like being shipwrecked on a desert island, isn't it?" he said. "As if our boats had drifted away."

At noon she again prepared an elaborate meal. She served pointes and grouse, hot biscuit with sugar syrup and canned peaches and coffee done to just the right color and aroma. He declared it wonderful, and they ate with repeated wishes that the supervisor might turn up in time to share their feast, but he did not. Then Berrie said firmly: "Now you must take a snooze. You look tired."

He was in truth not only drowsy, but lame and tired. Therefore he yielded to her suggestion.

She covered him with blankets and put him away like a child. "Now you have a good sleep," she said tenderly. "I'll call you when daddy comes."

When he woke the ground was again covered with snow, and the girl was feeding the fire with wood which her own hands had supplied.

Hearing him stir, she turned and fixed her eyes upon him with clear, soft gaze. "How do you feel by now?" she asked.

"Quite made over," he replied, rising alertly.

His cheer, however, was only pretense. He was greatly worried. "Something has happened to your father," he said. "His horse has thrown him, or he has slipped and fallen. His peace and excitement were gone. How far is it down to the ranger station?"

"About twelve miles."

"Don't you think we'd better rise camp and go down there? It is now 3 o'clock. We can walk it in two hours."

She shook her head. "No, I think we'd better stay right here. It's a long, hard walk, and the trail is muddy."

"But, dear girl," he began desperately, "it won't do for us to camp here alone in this way another night. What will Cliff say?"

She flamed red, then whitened. "I don't care what Cliff thinks. I'm done with him, and no one that I really care about would blame us." She was fully aware of his anxiety now. "It isn't our fault."

"It will be my fault if I keep you here longer!" he answered. "We must reach a telephone and send word out. Something may have happened to your father."

"I'm not worried a bit about him. It may be that there's been a big snow-fall up above us, or else a windstorm. The trail may be blocked, but don't worry. He may have to go round by Lost Lake pass." She pondered a moment. "I reckon you're right. We'd better pack up and rack down the trail to the ranger's cabin—not on my account, but on yours. I'm afraid you've taken cold."

"I'm all right, except I'm very lame, but I am anxious to go on. Ifly the way, is this ranger Settle married?"

"No; his station is one of the loneliest cabins on the forest. No woman will stay there."

This made Wayland ponder. "Nevertheless," he decided, "we'll go. After all, the man is a forest officer, and you are the supervisor's daughter."

She made no further protest, but basted herself closing the panel and putting away the camp utensils. She seemed to recognize that his judgment was sound.

It was after 3 when they left the tent and started down the trail, carrying nothing but a few toilet articles. He stopped at the edge of the clearing. "Should we have left a note for the supervisor?"

The trees were dripping, the willows heavy with water, and the mud ankle deep in places, but she pushed on steadily, and he, following in her tracks, could only marvel at her strength and sturdy self reliance. The swing of her shoulders, the pulse of her hand and the little movement of her waist made his own body seem a poor thing.

For two hours they zigzagged down a narrow canyon heavily timbered with fir and spruce, a dark, stern scene, crossed by roaring streams and dotted with frequent boggy meadows, whereon the water lay maddening deep. "We'll get out of this very soon," she called cheerily.

By degrees the gorge widened, grew more open, more genial. A few thickets of pale gold flashed upon their eyes like sunlight, and grassy bunches at-forded firmer footing, but on the slopes their feet slipped and slid painfully. Still Berrie kept her stride. "We must get to the middle fork before dark," she stopped to explain. "For I don't know the trail down there, and there's a lot of down timber just above the station. Now that we're out loose from our camp I feel nervous. As long as I have a tent I am all right, but now we are in the open I worry. How are you standing it?" She smiled him with keen and anxious glance, her hand upon his arm.

"Fine as a fiddle," he replied, as smiling a spirit he did not possess.

She found herself confronted by an Endless Maze of Blackened Tree Trunks.

"but you are marvelous. I thought cowgirls couldn't walk."

"I can do anything when I have to," she replied. "We've got three hours more of it." And she warily exclaimed, "Look back there!"

They had reached a point from which the fence could be seen, and, behold it was covered deep with a seamless robe of new snow.

"That's why dad didn't get back last night. He's probably wallowing along up there this minute." And she set off again with resolute stride. Wayland, pale face and labored breath followed her. She was filled with love and pity, but she pressed forward desperately.

"At last they came to the valley below, where the foresting the land had some years before, and which was strewn with fallen trees in desolation confusion. Here the girl made her mistake. She saw a small cabin and er, although Wayland called attention to a trail leading to the right up over the low grassy hills. For a mile the path was clear, but the noon found herself confronted by an endless maze of blackened tree trunks, and at last the path ended abruptly.

Dismayed and bailing, she said: "We've got to go back to that trail which branched off to the right. I reckon that was the highland trail which Settle made to keep out of the swamp. I thought it was a trail from Cameron peak, but it wasn't. Back we go."

She was suffering keenly now, not on her own account, but on his, for she could see that he was very tired, and to climb up that hill again was like punishing him a second time.

When she picked up the blazed trail it was so dark that she could scarcely follow it, but she felt her way onward, turning often to be sure that he was following. Once she saw him fall and cried out: "It's a shame to make you climb this hill again. It's all my fault. I ought to have known that that foul road led down into the timber."

Standing close beside him in the darkness, knowing that he was weary, wet and ill, she permitted herself the expression of her love and pity. Putting her arm about him, she drew his cheek against her own, saying: "Poor boy. Your hands are cold as ice!" She took them in her own warm clasp. "Oh, I wish we had never left the camp! What does it matter what people say?" Then she broke down and wept. "I shall never forgive myself if you—"

He bravely reassured her: "I'm not defeated. I'm just tired. That's all. I can go on."

"But you are shaking."

"That is merely a nervous chill. I'm good for another hour. It's better to keep moving anyhow."

She thrust her hand under his coat and laid it over his heart. "You are tired out," she said, and there was anguish in her voice. "Your heart is pounding terribly. You mustn't do any more climbing. And, hark, there's a wolf!"

He listened. "I hear him, but we are both armed. There's no danger from wild animals."

"Come," she said, instantly recovering her natural resolution. "We can't stand here. The station can't be far away. We must go on."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a running or itching ear, and the hearing is lost. This tube is inflamed by a number of causes, such as colds, catarrhs, and other diseases of the throat and nose. It is the duty of the physician to see that the tube is kept open, and the hearing restored. If the tube is not kept open, the hearing will be lost forever. The only way to keep the tube open is by using the Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is a powerful expectorant, and it will loosen the mucus that is blocking the tube. It is a safe and reliable remedy, and it will cure the deafness in a short time. It is sold by all druggists, and it is a household necessity.

IS TELEGRAPHIC CHAMPION.

Brickhouse Wins Carnegie Diamond Medal in All Around Tests.

The Carnegie Diamond medal, representing the all-around telegraphic championship, has been awarded to T. S. Brickhouse of San Francisco, until recently with the Associated Press. The championship contest was the feature of the telegraphers' tournament in connection with the Panama-Pacific exposition.

The championship test included the sending of twenty commercial messages, ten railroad messages, 500 words of press matter and a stipulated amount of bookkeeping matter, and the receiving of the same amount of railroad, commercial and bookkeeping matter and a thousand words of press copy. The winner's time was 38 minutes 49.35 seconds.

Brickhouse also took first honors in the commercial contest for sending six messages. H. E. Farquhar of the Associated Press, San Francisco, was the winner in the receiving event, taking 26 minutes 12 seconds, a new world's record. The tournament was open to the world.

Patroness of Music.

The origin of music is lost in an hourly. Among civilized people it is probably to be traced to the ancient Egyptian priests, who employed this art in their religious rites and ceremonies. From the Egyptians the Greeks and the Romans derived their knowledge of music. The ancient Hebrews probably took with them into Palestine some of the songs they had learned in Egypt. The hymns used in the temple formed the basis of the melodies of the early Christian church, and from these hymns was formulated the first authoritative musical system. St. Cecilia is termed the patroness of music.—Exchange

FORESTS AND MOISTURE.

Trees Conserve Water, Aid Percolation and Retard Evaporation.

Trees drink in and transpire an enormous quantity of water. This giving off tempers the dryness of the nearby atmosphere. Moisture bearing currents of air are caught by forest areas as they are not by the heated plains. Local showers may thus become more frequent where trees abound, or at least the availability of whatever rain may fall is increased for the locality by forest growth.

Foliage, twigs and branches break the fall of the raindrops. So does the litter on the forest floor. Hence the soil under this cover is not compacted as in the open field, but is kept loose and granular, so water can readily penetrate and percolate. The water reaches the ground more slowly, dripping gradually from the leaves, branches and trunks, and thus more time is allowed for it to sink into the soil and appear again in springs or subsoil moisture lower down.

In forests there is much less evaporation of moisture than in the open country because sun and wind do not have such free play. It is estimated that forests have from 50 to 60 per cent of water supply more than the open fields because of increased percolation and decreased evaporation.—Country Gentleman.

ITALY'S CRACK MARKSMEN.

They Are All Athletes and Are the Pride of the Army.

The bersagliere (sharpshooters) are the elite of the Italian army, and each bersagliere is a picked man, chosen for his hardihood and stamina, the average bersagliere being short and thick-set, but with magnificent strength and exceptional powers of endurance.

There is no prouder soldier in the world than the full blown bersagliere as he swags along the street of an Italian town in his dark blue uniform, with its rich red facings, and on his head, set at a rakish angle, the famous wide brimmed black slouch hat adorned with large, heavy, drooping plumes of green cocks' feathers.

Bersagliere, by the way, is pronounced ber-sar-lary.

When on the march the bersagliere never walks as do other soldiers, but always goes at a sort of quick trot.

These 25,000 or so men are among the most perfectly drilled troops in the world. Every single bersagliere, apart from being a man chosen for his endurance, is a fully trained athlete.—Westminster Gazette.

An Idol With Diamond Eyes.

The famous Orloff diamond was once the right eye of the great Old Serling hani in the temple of Brahmin. This precious gem was stolen at about the beginning of the eighteenth century by a French soldier who had made a pretense of being converted to the Hindu religion in order to gain the confidence of the priests and admission to the temple. The Frenchman first sold the diamond for $2,000. On the next turn, it was bought by a banker of Constantinople for $12,000. The banker kept it until 1774 and then sold it to the Russian empress for $20,000 and a life pension. The gem has been in the Russian royal family ever since. As it is now set in the imperial scepter of Russia it presents a flattened, rose cut surface and weighs exactly 104 1/2 carats.

Stinging Rebuke.

A society man said to Newport apostrophe of a current scandal:

"It reminds me of a very trenchant anecdote. A young married woman at a seashore hotel went up to a pretty girl in white who had been dancing like mad with the first one's husband and said:

"I've got a last year's coat suit that's quite good, really. To be sure, it's out of style. Still, would you like to have it?"

"The girl blushed red with mortification.

"What?" she said. "Do you think I'd wear your rusted clothes?"

"I thought you might," blushed the young married woman. "You seem anxious enough to get my husband!"—Exchange.

Grenadiers.

Evening writer in his diary under date 1878: "Now were first into service a new sort of soldiers called Grenadiers, who were dexterous in flinging hand grenades; they had furled caps with eared crowns, which made them look very fierce; and some had long beards hanging down behind as we picture fools. The original grenadiers hurled their grenades, and then charged the enemy with bayonets.—London Standard

TEMPERANCE NOTES

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

One of the pro-saloon arguments in high license states is that the liquor traffic helps maintain the public schools. A Nebraska newspaper fittingly replies thus: "Yes, that is true, but it does more than that. It maintains a school system of its own. While the little boys are being gathered into the public schools where they are trained to read, to write and to think, the young men are being gathered into the private schools of the liquor traffic, the saloons, where they are trained to swear, to tell few stories and to drink."

"The public school takes the boy, builds up his intellect and trends him towards high character and good habits. The private school of the liquor traffic, the saloon, takes that boy when he is a little older, degrades his intellect and trends him toward low character and bad habits."

A NATION'S RIGHT.

Professor Guglielmo, the noted Italian historian, predicts a "world-wide temperance movement as an outcome of the great world war." He says that hereafter no nation can afford to consider the prosperity of distillers and brewers above the welfare of the people. "Has not the state," he inquires, "the right and the duty to ask each citizen to sacrifice his goods and his life to save his nation from a foreign aggression against its glory, power, liberty or riches? And has it not the right to demand the renunciation of a few minutes of unhealthy, torpid joy to regenerate the citizen's health and save himself and future generations all the misfortunes of which drunkenness is the mother?"

ABOUT ALCOHOL.

This from the Teetotal World: "Emperors, business men, social reformers, are all agreed upon one thing: Alcoholic drinks work positive harm. A single glass of beer lessens a man's efficiency 7 per cent. Imagine then what larger quantities of wine, gin or whiskey will do. The up-to-date employer will not keep men who drink even in moderation. The secretary of the navy will not allow them on our warships. "Every commander in the field today in Europe is leading a sober army. Everywhere the brains of the world recognize that alcoholic liquors weaken both muscle and mind power."

MADNESS AND SANITY.

"In years to come, when we read the history of this decade," says the Kansas City Star, "the red streak caused by the upheaval in Europe may be no broader than the white one which will represent the world's severing of its relations with John Barleycorn. If the military madness of Europe does result in the liquor sanity of the world, the war may be hailed as the greatest blessing to mankind since the advent of Christianity."

A BAD MIXTURE.

"I know from experience that whiskey and ammunition mixed make trouble," said ex-Governor Oswald West of Oregon in explanation of his action in closing the Copperfield saloons more than a year ago. "I learned that a large number of persons in Copperfield were going armed. I did not want to take any chances of anybody getting killed, so I put the town under martial law and confiscated the whiskey."

ALCOHOL AND ACCIDENTS.

From 7 to 43 per cent of accidents are due directly or indirectly to drink, according to estimates of medical directors of three United States life insurance companies. Railroad accidents, 7 per cent; street cars, 8 per cent; automobile, 10 per cent; vehicles and horses, 8 per cent; heat and sunstroke, 43 per cent; machinery, 7 per cent; mines and quarries, 8 per cent; drowning, 13 per cent; gunshot, 10 per cent.

ESSENTIAL FOR SAFE CONDUCT.

The Boston Elevated Railway company, which was the recipient of a gold medal this year from the American Museum of Safety for the excellence of the methods used by it in promoting the safety and health of all employees, requires that "all men engaged in the car and train service must be free from the liquor habit as absolutely essential for the safe conduct of the business."

DEPRESSES INTELLECT.

One-half of one bottle of wine or two to four glasses of beer a day depress every form of intellectual activity.—Prof. J. J. Abel, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore.

GOING TO CLOSE THEM.

Dr. William C. Shaw, general secretary of the United Society for Christian Endeavor, had just finished an appeal for missions at one of the meetings of the great convention in Chicago, when a white-faced woman in the audience arose and, pointing a shaking finger at the chairman, cried:

"Close the saloons and I'll have some money to give."

"Amen!" shouted Doctor Shaw. "We'll close the saloons; we're going to close the doors of every grogshop in Christendom."

Automatic Spreading Gambrel.

Joe Wieland, who lives about three and one-half miles north of Central Lake has invented a self-spreading gambrel and hog hook. It is made of malleable iron and will fit any size animal. It folds together and hooks in the tendons. When an animal is raised the gambrel spreads out automatically enabling one to dress the animal very easily. You can take half of the animal down and leave the other half on the gambrel.—Torch.

MANY ATTENDED BAND CONCERT

First Annual Event Held at Harris Hall
Hall, October 30.

Speakers of Evening at Their Best—Event long to Be Remembered.

The first Ellsworth Citizens' Band banquet was held at Harris' hall, Ellsworth, Wednesday evening, October 20th, to commemorate the 2nd anniversary of its organization.

It was opened by two numbers by the band, followed by appreciated readings by Mrs. E. R. Harris and Mrs. Tom Emery, and selections by the orchestra, instrumental solo by Howard Baars and piano solo by Mrs. D. E. Clow.

All these partook of the good things for which Ellsworth is famous, consisting of nearly everything known to tickle the palate and satisfy the stomach, served with the usual Ellsworth spirit—"help your neighbor as well as yourself."

The feast was followed by fitting remarks by C. F. Ford, introducing the toastmaster, L. K. Clark. D. E. Clow responded to "The Band" in his usual philosophical manner, with Ford and other stories. Mrs. Reeves handled "Mere Man" in a scholarly address. D. Patterson spoke on "The Boaters" in a spirit which did not disappoint his hearers. Mrs. D. Patterson responded to "Looking Forward" in a pleasing manner. C. E. Bearse responded to "Haeh" with a palatable mixture.

All present expressed their appreciation of the efforts of Mr. Clark as master of ceremonies, and of the efforts of the past band leaders, F. O. Gillett and G. C. Townsend, and the good work of the band in fostering that "get to gether feeling." Ed. Boss, as manager of the band, in an appropriate speech, thanked the citizens for their loyal support.

Public Dance.

Bills announcing a public dance at Ellsworth, Friday evening, November 5th, are now out. Refreshments will be served at the Blue hall to those present. Good music is promised and a cordial invitation is extended all to be present.

"Oh, he is so used to restaurants that he won't enjoy his dinner unless he can watch his hat and coat."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Electric Furnaces Are Best.

It is pointed out in a bulletin published by the Bureau of Mines dealing with electric furnaces for making iron and steel that experiments conducted by the United States Steel corporation during the past four years show that, as compared with the acid Bessemer and basic open hearth processes, the electric process has the following advantages: A more complete removal of oxygen; the absence of oxides caused by the addition of silicon, manganese, etc.; the production of steel ingots of eight tons weight and smaller that are practically free from segregation; reduction of the sulphur content to 0.005 per cent if desired; reduction of the phosphorus content to 0.005 per cent, as in the basic open hearth process, but with complete removal of oxygen.—American Machinist.

Availances on Order.

By means of electric mines placed deep in the concealed crevices mantling the craters of the Swiss Alps avalanches are being manufactured to order for the benefit of moving picture photographers and others who find the sport attractive enough to pay the prices charged. The mines are connected by cable with a magnet in the valley, and when all is ready a push of the control lever furnishes a large quantity of gunpowder up on the side of the mountain and down comes the artificial avalanche with all the terrific rushing and roar of a natural land slide.—Electric World.

LIVE STOCK HUSBANDRY

SHEEP ON THE FARM.

They Perform Valuable Service by Cleaning Up the Waste.

The present season is one in which vegetation of all kinds is making exceptionally rank growth. In many fields weeds and grass have taken complete possession of the ground. These weeds, if allowed to mature, will sow the fields with foul seeds to hinder the crops of next year, says the Kansas Farmer.

There is only one way to harvest and turn into cash this rank growth of vegetation, and that is to get a bunch of

The Lincoln is a long woolled sheep and is the largest of all the breeds. The head is massive, but not coarse. The nose is somewhat arched and bare of wool. The bricket is full and deep, the body round and well proportioned, and while it is a heavy sheep it is not coarse. It is a desirable breed for mutton and wool. The animal shown is a Lincoln wether.

lunbs end turn them into the field. Lambs will clean up a lot of vegetation of this kind and leave the field as clean as a floor.

The one who has had no previous experience with sheep had best start in with not to exceed one carload. A good type of lamb for this work of cleaning up cornfields is one weighing about fifty pounds and in a fair condition. They should ordinarily be purchased in September and usually can be marketed in a little over two months, or as soon as taken out of the field. While some like to feed a little grain in addition, the surest profit comes from putting them on the market when they are taken from the fields. A good, thrifty lamb ought to gain from eight to fifteen pounds during a feeding period of this length.

Feeding sheep are likely to be high on the market this fall, but for the purpose of converting into cash such vegetation as will be present in great abundance there is little chance for loss unless through accident of some kind. If marketed direct from the field they will have eaten nothing that has cost any money. They could go to market for the same price per pound they cost as feeders and still make a little profit. But even if market conditions should be such that they barely pay expenses the farm would still be ahead, for the weeds would be harvested, no seed would mature to make the land foul the next year, and the bulk of the fertilizing value of this mass of vegetation would be converted over the fields in condition to quickly rebuke with the soil.

HARVESTING WITH HOGS.

Swine Lighten Farm Labor When Allowed to Feed Themselves.

The best is a successful harvester if given the job to clean up a field of rye or corn, writes a correspondent of the Farm and Garden. Not only does he do the work well, but he grows fat while he is performing the task. He works while the farmer can engage himself at something else. The spring crop of pigs will do the work, and there will be no loss.

One acre of rye, yielding twenty bushels, will run six hogs averaging 100 pounds about six weeks. If tankage is provided with the rye good gains will be the result. Then in early September the crop of shoots are ready for a cornfield. They will harvest the corn as well as the picker, who gets from 4 to 7 cents a bushel. First they should have a field of early corn, to be followed later with another field of a later variety. This provides a feed for a bunch of hogs from August to November end and will save hours of time. The hog will help a farmer solve the labor problem. Where it has been tried it has been a success.

Watering the Horses.

Water your horses as often as possible. So long as a horse is working water in small quantities will not hurt him. But let him drink only a few swallows if he is going to stand still. Do not fall to water him at night after he has eaten his hay. When a horse comes in after work sponge off the harness marks and sweat, his eyes, his nose and mouth and the dock. Wash his feet, but not his legs.

Brewers' Grains For Horses.

The ration for horses containing dried brewers' grains is mixed as follows: Six pounds of hay, eight pounds of dried brewers' grains, two pounds of bran and four pounds of corn. This ration has been found to give as satisfactory results as oats, as it can be recommended in cases where oats are more expensive than the mixed ration.—Rural New Yorker.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN.

When a crop makes very good profits there is danger of growing too much, thus inviting disease and insect enemies that may be troublesome to combat. Diversified gardening is the best plan for most producers. This makes it possible to rotate, which is an advantage from a good many standpoints.

Feed the soil if you wish to have the soil feed you, applies forcibly to warmup lands.

Good fruit can be raised only with care and attention given to spraying, pruning and generally good care.

The best compost heap is the manure of horses, cattle, sheep, hogs and fowls. All such should be saved.

Perennial flowering plants are satisfactory because they grow in the same place for years without much attention.

Know what you must spray for, then to the work right. Don't expect any one spray material to be a universal remedy.

Plow or spade up the poultry runs that are not occupied and sow to rye or a mixture of rye and clover. This will furnish green stuff for winter and at the same time help the soil.

Farm and Garden

THE SILO FOR LATE CORN.

Cool July Means Late Maturity in Any Event.

Only those who are sincerely and mistle fall to see that some of the 1915 corn crop will be too immature to crib, says the Farm and Garden.

second planting and, in some instances, third planting will beat Jack Frost's record, but the cool July this year means late maturity in any event. Even early planted corn on well drained land will mature later this year than usual and if this is the case it stands to reason that second and third planting will have in battle for its life if it reaches maturity.

Under these conditions men are making a move in the right direction when they plan on the erection of a silo. We have said before that we are not inclined to favor the plan of filling the silo with waxy, immature fodder, but this is not equivalent to saying that reasonably good ensilage cannot be made out of corn even though the crop is cut before the grain is well dent. It is true that corn may not contain its maximum nutrition value until the grain begins to harden, but one had better have 75 per cent of a crop saved in good shape, as it will be put in the silo, than to run the risk of losing it all by trying to crib soft, mushy corn.

Those who have had experience in shocking immature fodder know that after it stands in the field two or three months it is of very little value, because it weathers much more rapidly than mature corn, and, furthermore, if it is shocked while it is green the immature ears will invariably mold, so that their feeding value is absolutely lost. The same kind of corn put into the silo conserves the full feeding value because air is excluded from ensilage and there is no decay of soft corn. More acid will form, to be sure, where the corn is more or less immature than where it is mature, but the silage means that the ensilage will have to be used rationally, presumably along with rather more hay than would be necessary if the crop had reached maturity.

The policy of converting at least part of the late corn crop into ensilage will be carried out this year by dairymen and beef producers alike. The South Dakota station found out by experiment that as much as two pounds of gain daily can be made on steers fed ensilage alone, and, while this is above the average, yet it shows the possibilities that may be realized from this method of feeding. Used in conjunction with oilmeal or cottonseed meal ensilage makes an ideal food for all classes of cattle, and in some instances it has been utilized with good results in feeding it to horses. For the dairyman it is almost unsurpassed, particularly when one can feed in conjunction with clover or alfalfa hay or as before stated, along with some of the rich concentrates like cottonseed meal or oilmeal.

USES OF ASBESTOS.

Wonderful Mineral That May Be Spun and Woven into Cloth.

Asbestos is one of the great surprises in the mineral kingdom. On account of its finely fibrous, flexible, lustrous, incombustible character it is spun into yarn and woven into cloth for the clothing of firemen and furnace men who are exposed to heat that would burn ordinary clothing. It is extensively used for theater curtains and has saved many audiences from the horrors of conflagration.

A notable event of the year 1913 in the asbestos industry of the United States has been the opening of a new locality in Arizona, about thirty miles northeast of Globe, for the high grade chrysotile and as occurs in the depths of the Grand canyon. In occurrence, origin, quality and quantity this deposit is essentially the same as that of the Grand canyon district, but is much more accessible, being in a canyon about 300 feet deep and within thirty miles by trail and wagon road from the railway. It is associated with limestone and in this respect is strongly contrasted with the asbestos of Canada, which is found in serpentine rock, derived from peridotite.

The remarkable fiber from Arizona when twisted to a yarn 0.08 of an inch in thickness will support an average weight of fifteen and one-half pounds, its content of iron is decidedly lower than that of the Canadian fiber, and for that reason it is better for insulating purposes.—United States Geological Survey.

Hanty's Young Critic.

G. A. Henty, the writer for youth, frequently got letters from admirers all over the world asking for his autograph and offering criticism of his books. In a story of the peninsular war he made two boys disguise themselves by staining their faces with lozine. Shortly after the book was published he received a letter from a boy, who said he was a chemist's assistant, stating that while that special incident was represented as taking place in 1808 lozine was not discovered until 1811, three years later.

OUR PUBLIC FORUM

Otto Kahn
On Financial Farm Loans

Every citizen who desires to become capable in business should study banking, and every farmer who wants to see the business of agriculture properly financed should study diligently the financial systems of other industries. All other lines of industry have developed financial facilities adapted to their needs. We have all sorts of financial syndicates authorized by law or custom to deal in a certain line of securities, but in none of these financial channels will farm securities travel without a bonus in the way of an excessive rate of interest or heavy discounts.

The most powerful financial institutions in America are private banks and they are the most important to the financial life of industry in no line of business does honesty, efficiency and ability make more imperative demands than upon private bankers, whose greatest asset is the confidence of the buying public in his business judgment and integrity. Mr. Otto Kahn of Kahn, Loeb & Company, when asked to state the relation of the private banker to the business of the nation, said in part:

"One of the most important functions of the private banker is to be the instrument for providing the money needed for the efficient conduct and development of railroads and other industries. He does this by buying securities in bulk from those needing capital, for which purpose he usually associates himself with a large number of other financial houses, great and small, thus forming what is called a syndicate. Having in this way concluded the buying transaction he offers to the public the securities purchased by means of advertising, circularizing and through the facilities of the retail houses included in the syndicate, many of whom employ traveling salesmen. Of course the banker and the syndicate count on a reasonable profit for their services; on the other hand they run the risk of the securities, which they have definitely bought and paid for at a fixed price, remaining on their hands wholly, or in part, if the public, for one reason or another, should be unwilling to buy them. The selling of securities is a highly specialized trade, requiring much experience, organization, machinery and scrutiny. This is one of the reasons why corporations do better in offering securities to the public through bankers than if they offered them direct. The willingness of the public to buy depends upon their confidence in the integrity and the judgment of the banker who makes the offer, and a banker who attempts to mislead the public, or who is deficient in care or judgment, would very soon find himself without customers and, therefore, out of business. In many European countries, the functions of the private banker include the placing of bonds secured by farm mortgages. Bonds of this nature are issued in large quantities by mortgage banks who buy mortgages on farms and other real estate and deposit them as security for their own bonds, which in their turn are sold to bankers. It is to be hoped that similar institutions will in course of time, be created in America, thus placing the farming industry on a par with other important industries in facilities to obtain capital."

COUNTY NORMAL.

(Florence Milner.)

Miss Sophia Berg of East Jordan, visited the normal Thursday morning.

Miss May Stewart, county commissioner, called at the normal Monday afternoon.

Thursday morning the normal class went the plowing match. After watching the plowing, the class visited the Withers Dairy Barn. Mr. Withers explained the workings of the farm. Mr. Ingalls farm was also visited. Some of the normal students took active part in some of the sports of the afternoon.

Miss Ella Smith, the state supervisor of county normal schools, visited the normal Wednesday. Miss Smith gave an interesting talk on the Palmer Method of writing. She also suggested that the normal students try to secure a Palmer certificate. This can be accomplished by the students sending in weekly papers to the Palmer office in Chicago.

The normal class visited Mr. Vogt's class room and heard the delegation from the M. E. Sunday School thank Mr. Vogt for his efforts in trying to abolish the use of tobacco among the school boys, especially the athletic team. The Charlevoix people appreciate Mr. Vogt's efforts and are trying to aid him in his work among the boys.

Tuesday the normal class visited the meeting of the board of supervisors at the court house. The question for consideration was the laying and location of the state reward road. The arguments by Mr. Fitch and Mr. Harris for the low and high road respectively were followed by the class with the greatest interest. The reports of committees and other proceedings of the board were also interesting.

The normal class visited Miss Mary Berg's school at Marion Center, Thursday. The school was in almost perfect condition in regard to tidiness and other interior arrangements. Many specimens of seeds and vegetables had been brought in by the children and were neatly arranged for inspection. Miss Berg must have an interesting class in agriculture from the appearance of the exhibit. The children had written on various agricultural subjects and also showed some splendid free hand drawing which explained the work contained in the booklet.

Suffrage Notes

In Norway where women have full suffrage, the number of divorces is only 6 per 100,000, while in Japan, where the suffrage movement has hardly got a start, the divorce rate is 215 per 100,000. Suffrage certainly does not increase divorce.

"We have not lost New Jersey," said Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the National Suffrage Association, "it wasn't ours to lose. We have simply not won it yet, and we shall start a new campaign at once." New Jersey women do not need to feel discouraged; this is the first time the question has been voted on in their state. In Oregon suffrage was defeated five times but the sixth time it was triumphantly adopted.

Sometimes men say, and they seem to believe it, that women cannot understand politics. The following story shows how difficult some political problems may be: "A man was applying for a government position in which some knowledge of law was required. The examiner said: "Well, Casey what do you know about law anyway?" "Not a thing," said Casey. The examiner, who was Casey's political friend, was puzzled for a moment. But he finally made out his affidavit as follows: "that he had examined Mr. Casey as to his knowledge of the law, and, the best of his information and belief, he had answered every question he had put to him correctly." Casey was thereupon appointed to the position.

Anti-suffrage arguments are like the Kilkenny cats: they destroy one another. The charge is made on the one hand that women do not want the ballot and wouldn't use it if they had it. On the other hand men are warned that if women had the ballot they would spend all their time voting and their home would be neglected. The plain reply to these contradictory objections is that neither one is true in actual experience. Women have the ballot in twelve of the largest states in the Union, in all of the Scandinavian countries of Europe and in Australia and New Zealand.

They prize the suffrage privilege just as men do and they vote in just as large numbers.

Andrew H. Wood, formerly a professor in Ann Arbor and now of the Denver Law School in Colorado says: "I was an anti-suffragist when I lived in Michigan but I have been converted since coming to Colorado. I have seen no cases of women neglecting their home or their children or of their losing their womanliness or refinement or of their being less respected because of their voting. The casting of a ballot once a year or so has no more soil effect upon them than results from their being permitted to go to the Court House with about the same frequency to pay taxes."

CHARLEVOIX MARKETS

Quotations to Be Published in Courier Every Week in the Future.

From now the Courier will print a market column in every issue. Quotations published under this head will be obtained from various dealers in the city every Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The prices quoted will be those paid by the local dealers at the time received at this office. It will be impossible for our merchants to quote the following day's prices on many of the articles brought into their places of business. Market conditions change every day, and sometimes often.

All quotations published will be the prevailing prices on the day given, and will not cover the next day or the day after. This would be an impossibility. However, we believe that prices offered by Charlevoix dealers will be as high as paid elsewhere.

Sportsmen Urge Closed Season for Partridge

Past Cold Summer Has Resulted in Loss of Ninety Per Cent. of Young Birds.

A closed season of one year would be a very good step toward the preservation of the partridge. (Ruffed Grouse.) As usual there was a large hatch of young partridge throughout Upper Michigan about the first of June, but the prolonged cold rains, north-east storm and cold weather generally which set in about the fifth of June and ensued for three weeks chilled the young birds and as a result most of them died.

It is not overestimating to say that 90 per cent. of the hatch was lost by reason of this cold rainy weather. In the more remote sections of the woods where the bulk of game is to be found, partridge are scarce, widely scattered and wild. The reason for this is that about 90 per cent. of them are old birds. The small predatory animals, weasel, mink, and skunk, levy a heavy tax on partridge. Fox, hawks and owls also prey upon them and this applies especially during the winter months.

MONSTER APPLES

Grows This Year on the Taft Fruit Farm in Eveline Township.

A. L. Darbee, manager of the Taft fruit farm in Eveline township, sent to this office two samples of apples grown on the farm during the past year, which are the finest specimens of fruit we ever had the pleasure of seeing.

One was a Snow apple which measures 10½ inches in circumference, perfect in form and without a blemish. The other was a Grimes Golden, measuring 9½ inches in circumference and a perfect apple.

Mr. Darbee states that the sample of Snow apple was taken from a tree which was well loaded with the luscious fruit, but all wonderfully large apples of the finest quality. The Grimes Golden, he states, is but a fair sample of a majority of the apples of this variety grown on the farm.

The Taft fruit farm has a wonderful reputation throughout the state for not only the fine fruit grown, but the excellent manner in which it is taken care of. It is but an illustration of what can be done in the fruit line in Northern Michigan when proper care is given.

OFF FOR THE WOODS

Local Hunters Busy Preparing for Opening of the Hunting Season.

Local hunters are busy digging up their outfit preparator to going into camp at the opening of the deer season November 10. Charlevoix will be well represented above the treas this year, but not as strong as in past seasons, owing to the one deer law and a poor season.

Following are some of the parties who expect to leave within the next week:

County Clerk Richard Lewis, A. L. Fitch, L. E. Benton and Hube Ackert of Charlevoix, and J. H. Milford, Bert Olney, Thos. Shepard and Jasper Warden leave on Monday next for their old grounds about twelve miles northwest of Hessel.

D. F. Meech, W. E. Hampton and H. O. Mohrman of Charlevoix, E. R. Harris and L. VanSiver of Ellsworth, a T. Victor Hawkins will hunt on the Tahquamenaw north of Newberry. Willard Olney and others near Pickford, and other parties intend going whom we are not aware of.

Auction Sales.

Gilbert Ferris, who lives seven miles east of Charlevoix on what is known as the John Brown farm, will sell all farm implements, stock, grain, etc., at public sale on Wednesday, November 10, commencing at one o'clock. W. E. Byers will cry the sale. Read the advertisement on page 6.

Mrs. Joe Choon will also have a sale at her home near the Rock Product plant on Friday, November 12th, commencing at one o'clock. E. B. Ward auctioneer. See the advertisement on page 2.

Peninsular Grange.

Regular meeting October 30th with Worthy Master Heller presiding. Three visitors and twelve members present. The entertainment committee reported a $11 credit, which was accepted and turned over to the grange treasurer. Lecture hour was observed by discussing farm problems. A good attendance is desired at the next meeting, November 13th, to arrange for the Pomona Grange, November 18th.

MANY UPLIFTING TALKS MADE AT COUNTY S. S. CONVENTION

E. K. Mohr of New Buffalo Says That All Like to Belong to an Organization That is a Winner and Not a Loser—Advises All to Hustle.

The thirteenth annual meeting of the Charlevoix County Sunday School Association was held in the Boyne Falls M. E. Church, October 21, and 22. It was opened by prayer service conducted by Rev. Duffy of Boyne City. Rev. Shephard, pastor of the Convention church greeted the visiting delegates very cordially. Miss McManus of Boyne City rendered a sweet solo.

At 2:30 Mr. E. K. Mohr of New Buffalo, state warden, spoke on “The Winning Sunday School.” Briefly he said: “We like to belong to an organization that is a winner and not a loser.” There is no success in trying to be a has been nor a will be but an iser. Ask to go with God when you find out where he is going, don't try to drag him along with you. Don't go round and round for the main word is “go forward.” If you want to kill your Sunday School start behind hand, always use the same order of services, sing hymns in funeral march time, “Hark! from the tombs, a doleful sound.” Have your Sunday School board meeting only once a year.

“If you want to help your Sunday School, have a roll of honor, never give prizes, use rewards sometimes, recognition always, make a quarterly report to parents the same as in day school, plan a long time ahead for special services, have variety in program and build it around the lesson, use maps, charts, black boards, bulletin boards on the outside of the church, use printer ink, “Let the redeemed of the Lord say so,” make the Sunday School attractive.

“There are eight essentials for the minimum standard. 1. Extension—All reached. Have a home department and cradle roll. 2. Organization—All classes above 13 years of age should have officers and companies. 3. Grading—Grade the school that there may be advancement—stepping stones upward. 4. Instructive—Teach missions and temperance. 5. Educational—Training workers. 6. Workers' conference regularly held to talk over problems of the Sunday school and plan to win souls. 7. Decision for Christ urged. 8. Denominational offering for extension work.

“There must be affiliation for the winning Sunday school. Must send delegate to district, county and state conventions. Send report to conventions; send an offering and as many subscriptions to the state paper as possible.

“There are five things that every Sunday school must have to win: 1. Must have Bible in Sunday school. To say that one has a Bible Sunday school when the quarterly is used is like the conundrum I heard the other day—“How many legs will a dog have if he counts his tail one?” Fool, of course. Counting a quarterly a Bible does not make it one. It may be part of the Bible, as the tail is part of the dog; that is all.

“2. Have adults there. About three million men and women have lately come into the Sunday schools through the adult Bible class movement. “Forward men and women” is the slogan of the adults of to-day. He or she who forgets it is like the colored man who promised to get an old army officer to the train on time and had nothing but an old cavalry horse to do it with. It looked doubtful till the officer asked the privilege of driving the old horse. He said “Attention, charge,” and the horse shot forward at a rapid pace. When near the station he said “Halt,” and the horse stopped very quick. The colored man was greatly surprised, but concluded to try that way to get speed out of the old horse. Later he had another man to take to the train and was sure he could get him there on time, so said, “Attention, charge,” and forward the old horse went. As he neared the depot the colored man seemed to be worried, and at last said “You will have to jump, fer I dun forget the password.” The adult movement is so rapid to-day that if you have forgotten the password and want to get on you will have to jump.

“3. Training teachers. The scholar is what the Sunday school teacher is. That class that you have had so long that have not accepted Christ is where it is because you have not known enough. You lacked training. A boy was training a dog to do tricks. A nian came along and was admiring the work of the boy and asked to be allowed to teach the dog a few. The boy consented. The man worked hard, but failed and turned to the boy for an explanation. The boy said, “You must know more than the dog does if you want to teach him.” In 1902 one in eleven teachers were being trained, but now one out of every five are preparing to do better work.

“4. Touch. “Man must not live to himself alone.” Get in touch with other people and schools to get and give help. There are 30,000,000 scholars in the Sunday school army to-day.”

“5. Conquest. Teach missions. We must be out to work or no business to be out. Church's business is to take gospel to all countries. If the Sunday school has not this spirit it will die. Let the slogan be “Our Sunday school must grow and grow and go, and I will help to make it so.”

Mr. Fred Washburn, superintendent of the rural department of state Sunday school work, from Benton Harbor, spoke on “Rural Work.” Briefly, he said: “We must get first a vision of the great work of the Sunday school. The harvest truly is great.” Souls are more precious than silver and gold. Second, leadership. Seventy-five per cent. of the leaders in city Sunday school work were trained in the rural Sunday schools. If we fail to discover and develop leadership in country schools our city schools will suffer. Study the boys and girls in your class. Find leaders and train them for positions for which they are naturally adaptable.

“3. Organization. The successful rural school is the one which meets the needs of the community in all stages of its development. It has put 1,000,000 in the cradle roll and an array of men and women in the adult Bible classes. The Elgin Watch Factory, which employs 3,000 workers, does not have one who could make a watch alone. They are organized to make their parts so they will exactly fit together, into a perfect watch. You can do all kinds of work in your place in the Sunday school, but together you will win.

“4. Co-operation. This is absolutely necessary to success. Don't put on the brake like the new brakeman, but push. An engineer who had been on a run many years found a new engine waiting for him one morning. He had also a new brakeman. The pull up was hard and they came near not making it, even with the throttle thrown wide open and the fireman doing his best shovelling coal. When they reached the top and stopped the brakeman said to the engineer: “It was a lucky thing that I put on the brakes coming up the grade, or we would have slipped down the hill.” Some think it necessary to put on the brakes to church and Sunday school work to keep it from running down hill.

“5. Prayer and personal work are essential to a successful Sunday school. If it is not saving souls for Christ it is a failure. Personal evangelism must be the watchword. Prayer is the great thing that holds us to God. Hearts must be burdened for souls like the Baptist pastor at Berrien Springs when the Stephens evangelistic party was there. He wrote the names of 55 men for whom he was praying on a board in the tabernacle. Before the meetings closed 53 were saved. Stamp the impression of your character upon others. Two little girls were playing together. One invited the other home to supper with her, and at table grace was said. She went home and asked father if he would not say grace at the table. He refused, but told her she might. She did it for one month and papa and mama were saved. The character of the home had been stamped with the character of the other and souls were saved.”

A workers' conference conducted by Mr. Washburn closed the afternoon service.

After supper the song service was conducted by Mr. Joseph Ekstrom, and Rev. W. Thurston Gibbs of Boyne City led the devotional service.

The first address of the evening was given by Fred Washburn on “The Sunday School as a Religious Educational Institution.” “It is the greatest evangelistic force of to-day. It is within the power of the Sunday schools of America to evangelize the world in one generation. G. Campbell Morgan said: “The successful life depends upon having the word of God in the heart and giving it out to others.” Religious training and Bible education for children is the most important work of the day. There are but three institutions that give religious training and culture: “1. The home. As a rule they are not furnishing it, though they have much better opportunity than either of the others.

“2. The public schools. They have not given it. Some time ago New York city revised their song books so as to take out the names of God and Christ from every song. Pennsylvania has 5,000,000 Sunday school scholars, one-fifth of those in the nation. The Pennsylvania state law requires the reading publicly by every teacher at least ten verses of Scripture each day in the schools, and failing to do so makes it a misdemeanor and gives the opportunity to discharge them from the service.

“3. The church. It exercises restraining influences over old and young alike. Seventy-five per cent. of the young men between the ages of 15 and 25 who are in penal institutions never attended church nor Sunday school. 80,000 of these ages in the United States are criminals. Out of 908 in one of the penal institutions 899 never attended Sunday school, 89 seldom attended and only ten were at all regular. A New York city judge who had sentenced 2,700 to prison said that not one had been a regular attendant at Sunday school. Another judge who had been on duty eighteen years and passed upon many of their sentences never had a man nor woman before him who had been a member of a church or Sunday school for any length of time. It is better to form character than to reform criminal. The real secret of successful work is personal evangelism. If the world is to be evangelized it must be through personal evangelism and not through public appeal. (To be continued next week.)

WALKER-COOPER

Well Known Eveline Township Young People United in Marriage Wednesday.

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Cooper of Eveline township, Wednesday, October 27th, at high noon, occurred the marriage of their daughter, Miss Mary Kathryn, to Wellington P. Walker. The bride was attended by Miss Vera Sherman and Miss Hazel Walker. The two brothers of the bride, Charles and Walter, acted as best men.

In the presence of fifty relatives and friends Rev. Quinton Walker of the M. E. church of Charlevoix heard their vows and pronounced the words that made them one for life.

The bride's dress was of cream wool tulle. The house was tastefully trimmed with plants and cut flowers. A bountiful dinner was served and was enjoyed by all.

The bride is one of the most popular girls in the community. She has a host of friends in Charlevoix. The many beautiful gifts spoke eloquently of the high esteem in which she is held.

The groom is a prosperous young farmer with friends and the ability to make good.

The happy couple left on an extended wedding trip. They will be at home to their friends after November 10th.

CRUSHED HIS FINGERS

Robert Stafford Receives a Badly Crushed Hand While Moving Building.

Late Monday afternoon Robert Stafford, who was engaged with other workmen in moving the building lately vacated by F. E. Frazier, received injuries to his right hand which will result in the loss of the end of his thumb and first two fingers.

The men had moved the building as far as opposite the schoolhouse on Clinton street when the accident occurred. Stafford was placing the rollers under the building, and in some manner got his hand caught under the roller. The weight of the building crushed his fingers before he could release himself.

Masons and Their Friends from All Over the State Will Be Present—Good Time Expected.

The Masonic Inaugural Fair at Grand Rapids, November 19th to 27th, is an event that all Masons of Michigan are looking forward to with great interest. It will give Masons and their friends the first opportunity to inspect the splendid new Temple that is the home of the Fraternity in West Michigan. The new structure is six stories, costing when furnished over one-half million dollars and will take care of the needs of the Masonic fraternity for years to come, having every facility and being the best appointed Temple in the middle west.

The Inaugural Fair and opening have aroused state and national interest. President Wilson will press the button that will open the fair; Vice President Marshall and others of the cabinet will be in attendance. Governor Ferris, his staff and other state and national officers of Masonic bodies will also lend their presence during the event.

Entertainment features of the fair will divide honors with the impressive inaugural of the new building and for nine days Grand Rapids will enjoy the most brilliant feast of good things that Michigan ever witnessed. Every nook and corner of the new Temple will be devoted to some feature or attraction and the spirit of frivolity will reign supreme.

HALLOWE'EN FROLIC

Young People Celebrate Annual Event at Home of Miss Elsie Cook.

Those who attended the party at the home of Miss Elsie Cook Friday night, October 29, reported a very nice time.

It is said that some of the girls saw a ghost descending the stairs about eight o'clock, but they could not describe it, since the only light which they had was that of the jack-o'-lantern which hung from the ceiling by a string.

The first part of the evening was spent in playing games and other lively amusements, in which all took an active part. After the refreshments had been served, each individual was ready with at least one riddle or joke before returning to their respective homes.

Miss Helen Armstrong wishes to announce that she will be home from her southern Michigan visit this week and on Friday evening, November 12, will open her classes in the Bank ball. At 7:30 she will hold a class in social dancing and at 8:30 assembly will be held. Children's classes will be held every Saturday in gymnastic and folk dancing. Adv. 4411

A ROMANCE OF THE BEAR TOOTH RANGE
By HAMLIN GARLAND

SYNOPSIS

Wayland Norcross, an eastern youth seeking health in Colorado, meets Berrie McFarlane, called Berrie, typical ranch girl, daughter of the supervising ranger of Bear Tooth forest.

Berrie is greeted by her lover, Cliff Belden, a cowboy, supposed to be interested in a saloon at Meeker's Mill, where Norcross is bound. Berrie guides Norcross to his destination.

A shower intercepts them and the girl gives the youth her raincoat. There is a rough element at Meeker's, and Norcross chooses Landon, the ranger, as his companion. Landon loves Berrie.

Cliff notices Berrie's interest in the tenderfoot and warns him away. He also takes his betrothed to task. She resents this and breaks their engagement.

Norcross, the ranger at Bear Tooth, gives Wayland points on forestry. Berrie's father offers him a place in the service. Berrie decides to go with them over the trail.

They climb the high, rough trail and only make camp when Wayland is on the point of collapse. Night in the open charms Wayland.

Wayland blunders repeatedly. The supervisor goes after the horses which have wandered off. He is detained. Norcross arranges to sleep outside and Berrie inside a tent.

Wayland being ill, Berrie insists that he sleep in the tent. The supervisor doesn't return. They break camp. Wayland is used up on the trail.

CHAPTER IX.
The Other Girl.

THE girl's voice stirred the bewildered youth into action again and he followed her mechanically, often stumbling against the trees, slipping and sliding, till at last his guide, picking down a sharp slope, came directly upon a wire fence.

"Glorious!" she called. "Here is a fence, and the cabin should be near, although I see no light. Hello! Tony!"

No voice replied, and, keeping Wayland's hand, she felt her way along the fence till it revealed a gate; then she turned toward the roaring of the stream, which grew louder as they advanced. "The cabin is near the falls, that much I know," she assured him. Then a moment later she joyfully cried out, "Here it is!"

Out of the darkness a blacker, sharper shadow rose. Again she called, but no one answered. "The ranger is away," she exclaimed, in a voice of indignant alarm.

Leading him toward the middle of the room, Berrie said: "Stand here till I strike a light."

As her match flamed up Norcross found himself in a rough walled cabin, in which stood a square cook stove, a rude table littered with dishes, and three stools made of slabs. It was all very rude, but it had all the value of a palace at the moment.

The girl's quick eye saw much else. She located an oil lamp, some pine wood and a corner cupboard. In a few moments the lamp was lit, the stove refilled with fuel and she was stripping Wayland's wet coat from his back, cheerily discarding as she did so.

"Here's one of Tony's old jackets, put that on while I see if I can't find some dry stockings for you. Sit right down here by the stove; put your feet in the oven. I'll have a fire in a jiffy. There, that's right. Now I'll start the coffee pot." She soon found the coffee pot, but it was unground. "Wonder where he keeps his coffee mill." She rummaged about for a few minutes, then gave up the search. "Well, no matter, here's the coffee, and here's a hammer. One of the laws of the trail is this: If you can't do a thing one way, do it another. I depend on this coffee to trace you up," she said.

After hanging a blanket over the broken window, she set out some cold meat and a half dozen baking powder biscuits, which she found in the cupboard, and as soon as the coffee was ready she poured it for him, but she would not let him leave the fire. She brought his supper to him and sat beside him while he ate and drank.

The hot, strong coffee revived him physically and brought back a little of his courage, and he said, "I'm ashamed to be such a weakling."

"Now, hush," she commanded. "It's not your fault that you are weak. Now, while I am eating my supper you slip off your wet clothes and creep into Tony's bunk, and I'll all one of these sheep skins with hot water to put at your feet."

It was of no use for him to protest against her further care. She insisted, and while she ate he meekly carried out her instructions, and from the delicious warmth and security of his bed watched her moving about the stove

"If you can't do a thing one way, do it another."

asked. "I'm awfully sorry. I'm trying to be extra quiet. I dropped a pan. How do you feel this morning?"

He pondered this question a moment. "Is it tomorrow or the next week?"

She laughed happily. "It's only the next day."

He laid his hands together and then felt of his pulse. "I don't seem to have a temperature. I just feel lazy, limp and lousy, but I'm going to get up. If you'll just have the room for a moment."

"Don't try it now. Wait till you have had your breakfast. You'll feel stronger then."

At this point came again the disturbing realization that this night of struggle and the ministrations of his brave companion had involved him deeper in a mesh from which honorable escape was almost impossible. The ranger's cabin, so far from being on end of their compromising intimacy, had added and was still adding to the weight of evidence against them both.

The presence of the ranger or the supervisor himself could not now save Berrie from the gossip.

She brought his breakfast to him, and sat beside him while he ate, chatting the while of their good fortune.

"It is glorious outside, and I am sure you'll get across today, and Tony is certain to turn up before noon. He probably went down to Coal City to get his mail."

"I must get up at once," he said, in a panic of fear and shame. "The supervisor must not find me laid out on my back. Please leave me alone for a moment."

She went out, closing the door behind her, and as he crawled from his bed over his muscles in his body seemed to cry out against being moved. Nevertheless he persisted and at last succeeded in putting on his clothes, even his shoes, though he found tying the laces the hardest task of all, and he was at the wash basin bathing his face and hands when Berrie hurriedly re-entered. "Some tourists are coming," she announced in an excited tone. "A party of five or six people, a woman among them, is just coming down the slope. Now, who do you suppose it can be? It would be just our luck if it should turn out to be some one from the mill."

He divined at once the reason for her dismay. The visit of a woman at this moment would not merely embarrass them both, it would torture Berrie. "What is to be done?" he asked, roused to alertness.

"Nothing; all we can do is to stand put and act as if we belonged here."

"Very well," he replied, moving stiffly toward the door. "Here's where I can be of some service. I am an excellent white liar."

The beat of hoofs made the bridge drew his attention to the mill race, which the keen eyes of the girl had detected as it came over the ridge to the east. The party consisted of two men and two women and three pack horses completely outfitted for the trail.

One of the women, spurring her horse to the front, rode serenely up to where Wayland stood and called out: "Good morning! Are you the ranger?"

"No, I'm only the guard. The ranger has gone down the trail."

He perceived at once that the speaker was an alien like himself, for she wore tan colored riding boots, a divided skirt of expensive cloth and a jaunty, wild haired sombrero. She looked indeed precisely like the heroine of the prevalent western drama.

Her sleeves, rolled to the elbow, disclosed shapely brown arms, and her neck, bare to her bosom, was equally sun smelt, but she was no round cheeked, so childishly charming, that the most critical observer could find no fault with her makeup.

One of the men rode up. "Hello, Norcross. What are you doing over here?"

The youth smiled blandly. "Good morning, Mr. Belden. I'm serving my apprenticeship. I'm in the service now."

"The mischief you are!" exclaimed the other. "Where's Tony?"

"Gone for his mail. He'll return soon. What are you doing over here, may I ask?"

"I'm here as guide to Mr. Moore. Mr. Moore, this is Norcross, one of McFarlane's men. Mr. Moore is connected with the tie camp operations of the railway."

Moore was a tall, thin man with a gray beard and keen blue eyes. "Where's McFarlane? We were to meet him here. Didn't he come over with you?"

"We started together, but the horses got away, and he was obliged to go back after them. He also is likely to turn up soon."

"I am frightfully hungry," interrupted the girl. "Can't you hand me out a bunk of bread and meat? We've been riding since daylight."

Berrie suddenly appeared at the door. "Sure thing," she called out. "Slide down and come in."

Moore removed his hat and bowed. "Good morning, Miss McFarlane. I didn't know you were here. You know my daughter Slona?"

Berrie nodded coldly. "I've met her."

He halted the other woman. "And Mrs. Belden, of course, you know."

Mrs. Belden, the fourth member of the party, a middle aged, rather bulky person, just being eased down from her horse, turned on Berrie with a battery of questions. "Good Lord! Berrie McFarlane, what are you doing over in this forsaken hole? Where's your dad? And where is Tony? If Cliff had known you was over here he'd have come too."

Berrie retained her self possession. "Come in and get some coffee, and we'll straighten things out."

Apparently Mrs. Belden did not know that Cliff and Berrie had quarreled, for she treated the girl with maternal familiarity. She was a good natured, well intentioned old sloven, but a most renowned tattler, and the girl feared her more than she feared any other woman in the valley. She had always avoided her, but she showed nothing of this dislike at the moment.

Wayland drew the younger woman's attention by saying, "It's plain that you, like myself, do not belong to these parts, Miss Moore."

"What makes you think so?" she brightly queried.

"Your costume is too appropriate. Haven't you noticed that the women who live out here carefully avoid convenient and artistic dress? Now, your outfit is precisely what they should wear and don't."

This annoyed her. "I know, but they all say they have to wear out their Sunday go to meeting clothes, whereas I can 'rig out' proper. I'm glad you like my 'rig.'"

At the moment he was bent on drawing the girl's attention from Berrie, but as she went on to become to like her, she said: "No, I don't belong here, but I come out every year during vacation with my father. I love this country. It's so big and wide and wild. Father has built a little bungalow down at the lower mill, and we enjoy every day of our stay."

"You're a Smith girl," he abruptly asserted.

"What makes you think so?"

"Oh, there's something about you Smith girls that gives you dead away."

"Gives us away? I like that."

"My phrase was unfortunate. I like Smith girls," he hastened to say.

In five minutes they were on the friendliest terms—talking of mutual acquaintances—a fact which both puzzled and hurt Berrie. Their laughter angered her, and whenever she glanced at them and detected Slona looking into Wayland's face with respectful slaver she was embittered. She was glad when Moore came in and interrupted the dialogue.

Norcross could not relax, though he considered the dangers of cross examination almost entirely passed. In this he was mistaken, for no sooner was the keen edge of Mrs. Belden's hunger dulled than her curiosity sharpened.

"Where did you say the supervisor was?" she repeated.

"The horses got away, and he had to go back after them," again responded Berrie, who found the scrutiny of the other girl deeply disconcerting.

"When do you expect him back?"

"Any minute now," she replied, and in this she was not deceiving them, although she did not intend to volunteer any information which might embarrass either Wayland or herself.

Norcross tried to create a diversion. "Isn't this a charming valley?"

Slona took up the cue. "Isn't it! It's romantic enough to be the back drop in a Bret Harte play. I love it!" Moore, turned to Wayland, "I know

HOPKINS

"Not on the top, but climbing."

We are again at our work after our two weeks vacation.

Louise Morse, who was attending our school, is now staying with Mrs. Milner and attending the Charlevoix school.

Miss Srigley, our teacher, visited the Barnard school during our vacation and has been telling us of the things they are doing.

We are making a very interesting experiment in agriculture, showing the difference in the crops that are drained and those that are not.

The seventh and eighth grades are taking the classic "The Courtship of Miles Standish" for reading now.

Della Pease is editor this week.

The school have chosen colors, which are blue and white, and also a motto,
"Bound to Win."

Six certificates were awarded to pupils this month for being neither absent nor tardy. Six out of seventeen, but we can do better.

Wm. Srigley shot a chicken hawk that has been flying around his house for some time. It was two feet from its head to the tip of its tail, and three feet nine inches from one wing tip to the other.

The little children are doing some nice work in drawing and coloring this year.

If by Christmas the majority of our school have received certificates, our teacher will present us with a pennant in our colors, blue and white, and the name of our school, Hopkinton, on it.

We have some new curtains for the windows which improve the looks of the schoolroom.

Clara Winick and Geo. Haggerty were absent from school Thursday.

The fourth grade is memorizing the poem "Abou Ben Adhem."

NOWLAND SCHOOL NOTES

Ten pupils out of seventeen earned certificates of award this month, and last month there were twelve in the school who earned them.

The pupils are busy writing examinations this week.

The chart children are having a contest. Those who go to bed at 7:30 every school night this term are to get a prize. They are very wide awake and studious as the result, and the parents seem well pleased.

Two Special Meetings.

A Workers' Conference for Sunday school and young peoples Workers will be conducted at the Baptist church

the address and conduct the conference.

In the evening, at 7:30 Dr. Robinson

Dr. Robinson's experience in the foreign mission field well fits him to bring to us a great message. Don't miss it.

HOTEL MAN MISSING

Disappeared from His Home in Mancelona Over Six Weeks Ago.

The whereabouts of Robt. Case, proprietor of the Hotel Handy, Mancelona, remain as much of a mystery to-day as ever. Not a word has been heard concerning the man, and his disappearance has caused considerable excitement and gossip.

Case left six weeks ago, driving away in his newly-acquired automobile. He had made no preparation for a depurture, so far as can be ascertained, and relatives can ascribe no reason for his disappearance.

The management of the hotel has been taken up by Mr. Case's wife and her mother. Meanwhile an energetic effort is underway to locate the man.

Fewer Deer Hunters This Year.

County Clerk Lewis says deer hunters are not going to the north woods from this section this year in as large numbers as last season, the poor season being responsible for keeping many at home. "I can't afford to go this year, crops too poor," is the remark heard in the country just now when hunting on the north shore is mentioned. Only a few licenses have been taken out so far. There will be a small sized rush, however, early in November just a few days before the actual season opens.

The Catholic ladies will give a baked goods and apron sale on Saturday, November 6, at Yettaw's ice cream parlors.
A 15c lunch will also be served in connection with the sale. Adv. 441f

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

den was still so much in the dark that she called to Berrie: "I'm going to send word to Cliff that you are over here. He'll be crazy to come this minute he finds it out."

"Don't do that!" protested Berrie. "Wayland turned to Berrie. 'That would be pleasant,' he said smilingly. But she did not return his smile. On the contrary, she remained very grave."

"I wish that old telephoner had kept away. She's going to make trouble for us all. And that girl, isn't she a spectacle? I never could bear her."

"Why, what's wrong with her? She seems a very nice, sprightly person." "She's a regular play actor. I don't like madcap people. Why does she go around with her sleeves rolled up that way and—her dress open at the throat?"

"Oh, those are the affectations of the moment. She wants to look tough and bold. That's the fashion just now. It's only a harmless piece of foolishness."

She could not tell him how deeply she resented his ready tone of camaraderie with the other girl, but she was secretly suffering. It hurt her to think that he could forget his aches and be so free and easy with a stranger at a moment's notice. Under the influence of that girl's smile he seemed to have quite forgotten his exhaustion and his pain. It was wonderful how cheerful he had been while she was in sight.

In all this Berrie did him an injustice. He had been keenly conscious, during every moment of the time, not only of his bodily ill, but of Berrie, and he had kept a brave face in order that he might prevent further questioning on the part of a malicious girl. It was his only way of being heroic. Now that the crisis was passed he was quite as much of a wreck as ever.

CHAPTER X.

Further Perplexities.

PERCEIVING Wayland's returning weakness, Berrie insisted on his lying down again while she set to work preparing dinner. "There is no telling when father will get here," she said. "And Tony will be hungry when he comes. Lie down and rest."

He obeyed her silently and, going to the bunk, at once fell asleep. How long he slept he could not tell, but he was awakened by the voice of the ranger, who was standing in the doorway and regarding Berrie with a round-eyed stare.

He was a tall, awkward fellow of about thirty-five, plainly of the frontier type, but a man of intelligence. At the end of a brief explanation Berrie said, with an air of authority: "Now you'd better ride up the trail and bring our camp outfit down. We can't go back that way anyhow."

The ranger glanced toward Wayland. "All right, Miss Berrie, but perhaps your tenderfoot needs a doctor."

Wayland rose painfully, but resolutely. "Oh, no, I am not sick. I'm a fit."

The Supervisor Waved His Hand.

He knew, that's all. I'll go along with you."

"No," said Berrie decisively. "You're not well enough for that. Get up your horses, Tony, and by that time I'll have some dinner ready."

"All right, Miss Berrie," replied the man and turned away.

Hardly had he crossed the bridge on his way to the pasture when Berrie cried out, "There comes daddy."

Wayland joined her at the door and stood beside her watching the supervisor as he came zigzagging down the steep hill to the east with all his horses trailing behind him roped together head to tail.

"Ha! ha! he's a round boy. Look at him," she exclaimed. "He'll be tired out and absolutely starved. Wahoo!" she shouted in greeting, and the supervisor waved his hand.

There was something superb in the calm seat of the veteran as he slid down the slope. He kept his place in the saddle with the air of the rider to whom hunger, fatigue, windfalls and snowdrifts were all a part of the day's work, and when he reined in before the door and dropped from his horse he put his arm about his daughter's neck with quiet word: "I thought I'd find you here. How is everything?"

"All right, daddy. But what about you? Where have you been?"

"Clean back to Mill park. The blamed cayuses kept just ahead of me all the way."

"Poor old dad! And on top of that came the snow."

"Yes, and a whole hatful. I couldn't get back over the high pass. Had to go round by Lost lake, and, to cap all, Old Baldy took a notion not to lend. Oh, I've had a peach of a time, but here I am. Have you seen Moore and his party?"

"Yes, they're in camp up the trail. He and Alec Belden and two women. Are you hungry?"

He turned a comical glance upon her. "Am I hungry? Sister, I am a wolf. Norcross, take my horses down to the pasture."

She hastened to interpose. "Let me do that, daddy. Mr. Norcross is badly used up. You see, we started down here late yesterday afternoon. It was raining and horribly muddy, and I took the wrong trail. The darkness caught us, and we didn't reach the station till nearly midnight."

Wayland acknowledged his weakness. "I guess I made a mistake, an' a big one. I'm not fitter for this strenuous life."

McFarlane was quick to understand. "I didn't intend to pitchfork you into the forest life quite so suddenly," he said. "Don't give up yet awhile. You'll harden to it."

"Here comes Tony," said Berrie. "He'll look after the ponies."

Nevertheless Wayland went out, believing that Berrie wished to be alone with her father for a short time.

As he took his seat McFarlane said: "You stayed in camp till yesterday afternoon, did you?"

"Yes, we were expecting you every moment."

He saw nothing in this to remark upon. "Did it snow at the lake?"

"Yes, a little. It mostly rained."

"It stormed up on the divide like a January blizzard. When did Moore and his party arrive?"

"About 10 o'clock this morning."

"I'll ride right up and see them. What about the outfit? That's at the lake, I reckon?"

"Yes, I was just sending Tony after it. But, father, if you go up to Moore's camp don't say too much about what has happened. Don't tell them just when you took the back trail and just how long Wayland and I were in camp."

"Why not?"

She reddened with confusion. "Because—You know what an old gossip Mrs. Belden is. I don't want her to know. She's an awful talker, and our being together up there all that time will give her a chance."

A light broke in on the supervisor's brain. In the midst of his preoccupation as a forester he suddenly became the father. His eyes narrowed and his face darkened. "That's so. The old rip could make a whole lot of capital out of your being left in camp that way. At the same time I don't believe in dodging. The worst thing we could do would be to try to blind you when you came?"

"No, he was down the valley after his mail."

His face darkened again. "That's another piece of bad luck too. How much does the old woman know at present?"

"Nothing at all."

"Didn't she cross examine you?"

"Sure she did, but Wayland side tracked her. Of course it only delays things. She'll know all about it sooner or later. She's great at putting two and two together. Two and two with her always make five."

McFarlane mused. "Cliff will be plumb crazy if she gets his ear first."

"I don't care anything about Cliff, daddy. I don't care what he thinks or does if he will only let Wayland alone."

"See here, daughter, you do seem to be terribly interested in this tourist."

"He's the finest man I ever knew, father."

He looked at her with tender trustful glance. "He isn't your kind, daughter. He's a nice clean boy, but he's different. He don't belong in our world. He's only just sleeping here. Don't forget that."

"I'm not forgetting that, daddy. I know he's different. That's why I like him."

After a pause she added: "No body could have been nicer all through those days than he has been. He was like a brother."

McFarlane fixed a keen glance upon her. "Has he said anything to you? Did you come to an understanding?"

Her eyes fell. "Not the way you mean, daddy, but I think he—likes me. But do you know who he is? He's the son of W. W. Norcross, that big Michigan lumberman."

McFarlane started. "How do you know that?"

"Mr. Moore asked him if he was any relation to W. W. Norcross, and he said, 'Yes, a son.' You should have seen how that Moore girl changed her face."

"The moment he admitted that. She'd been very free with him up to that time. But when she found out he was a rich man's son she became as quiet and innocent as a kitten. I hate her! She's a deceitful snip!"

"Well, now, daughter, that being the case, it's all the more certain that he don't belong to our world, and you mustn't fix your mind on keeping him here."

"A girl can't help fixing her mind, daddy."

"Or, changing it." He smiled a little. "You used to like Cliff. You liked him well enough to promise to marry him."

"I know I did. But I despise him now."

"Poor Cliff! But the thing we've got to guard against is old lady Belden's tongue. She and that Belden gang have it in for us. And all that has kept them from open war has been Cliff's relationship to you. They'll take a keen delight in making the worst of all this camping business."

McFarlane was now very grave. "I wish your mother was here this minute. I guess we had better cut out this timber cruise and go right back."

"No, you mustn't do that. That would only make more talk. Go on with your plans. I'll stay here with you. It won't take you but a couple of days to do the work, and Wayland needs the rest."

"But suppose Cliff hears of this business between you and Norcross and comes gillybopping over the ridge?"

"Well, let him. He has no claim on me."

He rose unsteadily. "It's all mighty risky business, and it's my fault. I should never have permitted you to start on this trip."

"Don't you worry about me, daddy. I'll pull through somehow. Anybody that knows me will understand how little there is in—old lady Belden's gub."

"I've had a beautiful trip, and I won't let her nor anybody else spoil it for me."

Wayland was down on the bridge leaning over the rail listening to the song of the water.

McFarlane approached gravely, but when he spoke it was in his usual soft monotone. "Mr. Norcross," he began, with candid infection, "I am very sorry to say it, but I wish you and my daughter had never started on this trip."

"I know what you mean, supervisor, and I feel as you do about it. Of course none of us foresaw any such complication as this, but now that we are snarled up in it we'll have to make the best of it. No one of us is to blame. It was all accidental."

The youth's frank words and his sympathetic voice disarmed McFarlane completely. Even the slight resentment he felt melted away. "It's no use saying 'if,' he remarked at length. "What we've got to meet is Seth Belden's report—Berrie has cut loose from Cliff, and he's red-headed already. When he drops on to this story, when he learns that I had to chase back after the horses and that you and Berrie were alone together for three days, he'll have a fine chat to swing, and he'll swing it, and Alec will help him. They're all waiting a chance to get me, and they're mean enough to get me through my girl."

"What can I do?" asked Wayland.

McFarlane pondered. "I'll try to head off Marm Belden and I'll have a talk with Moore. He's a pretty reasonable chap."

"But you forget there's another tale bearer. Moore's daughter is with them."

"That's so. I'd forgotten her. Good Lord, we are in for it! There's no use trying to cover anything up."

Here was the place for Norcross to speak up and say, "Never mind, I'm going to ask Berrie to be my wife." But he couldn't do it. Something rose in his throat which prevented speech. A strange repugnance, a kind of silent resentment at being forced into a declaration kept him silent, and McFarlane, disappointed, wondering and hurt, kept silence also.

Norcross was the first to speak. "Of course those who know your daughter will not listen for an instant to the story of an unclean old thing like Mrs. Belden."

"I'm not so sure about that," replied the father gloomily. "People always listen to such stories, and a girl always gets the worst of a situation like this. Berrie's been brought up to take care of herself, and she's kept clear of criticism so far, but with Cliff on edge and this old rip snooping around—His mind suddenly changed. 'You're being the son of a rich man won't help any. Why didn't you tell me who you were?'"

"I didn't think it necessary. What difference does it make? I have nothing to do with my father's business. His notions of forest speculation are not mine."

"It would have made a difference with me, and it might have made a difference with Berrie. She mightn't have been so free with you at the start if she'd known who you were. You looked sick and kind of lonesome, and that worked on her sympathy."

"I was sick and I was lonesome, and she has been very sweet and lovely to me, and it breaks my heart to think that her kindness and your friendship should bring all this trouble and suspicion upon her. Let's go up to the Moore camp and bare it out with them. I'll make any statement you think best."

"I reckon the less said about it the better," responded the older man. "I'm going up to the camp, but not to talk about my daughter."

"How can you help it? They'll force the topic."

"If they do I'll force them to let me alone," retorted McFarlane, but he went away disappointed and sorrowful.

When the supervisor returned from the camp something in his manner revealed the fact that the situation had not improved.

"They forced me into a corner," he said peevishly. "I lied out of one night, but they know that you were here last night. Of course they were respectful enough as long as I had an eye on them, but their tongues are wagging now."

An bedtime drew near Settle took a blanket and went to the corral, and Berrie insisted that her father and Wayland occupy the bunk.

Norcross protested, but the supervisor said: "Let her alone. She's better able to sleep on the floor than either of us."

This was perfectly true; but, in spite of his bruised and aching body, the youth would gladly have taken her place beside the stove. It seemed pitifully unjust that she should have this physical hardship in addition to her uneasiness of mind.

Hereafter suffered a restless night, the most painful and broken she had known in all her life. She acknowledged that Slona Moore was prettier and that she stood more nearly to Wayland's plane than herself, but the realization of this fact did not bring surrender. She was not of that temper. All her life she had been called upon to combat the elements, to hold her own amid rude men and inconsiderate women, and she had no intention of yielding her place to a pert coquette, no matter what the gossip might say.

"She shall not have her way with Wayland," she decided. "I know what she wants—she wants him at her side tomorrow. But I will not have it so. She is trying to get him away from me."

The more she dwelt on this the hotter her jealous fever burned. The floor on which she lay was full of knots. She could not lose herself in sleep, tired as she was. The planks no longer turned their soft spots to her flesh, and she rolled from side to side in torment.

Her plan of action was simple. "I shall go home tomorrow and take Wayland with me. I will not have him going with that girl; that's settled."

The hard trip of the day before had seemingly done him no permanent injury. On the contrary, a few hours' rest had almost restored him to his normal self. "Tomorrow he will be able to ride again." And this thought reconciled her to her hard bed. She did not look beyond the long, delicious day which they must spend in returning to the Springs.

She fell asleep at last and was awakened only by her father thudding about the stove.

NOVEMBER 13, 1915.

Come and let us show you the wonderful HOT BLAST AIR TIGHT FLORENCE in operation, burning absolutely all the smoke, soot and gas in the cheapest soft coal or slack. It will enable you to realize that you can burn the cheapest soft coal or slack with the same regularity and cleanliness as if you were burning artificial or natural gas. It will enable you to realize that you can burn the cheapest soft coal or slack without any soot accumulating in the inside of the stove, in the pipe or in the flue. It will enable you to realize that the FLORENCE is the only absolute, practical smoke consuming device or stove that has ever been created.

$5,000.00 Will Be Paid to any stove manufacturer or dealer who will produce a stove that will consume all the smoke or all the ingredients of Soft Coal from the moment the fire is started, outside the construction of the Florence. This offer holds good during 1915. (Signed) J. B. HOWARD.

THE J. B. HOWARD COMBUSTION DEVICE, which is embodied in the Hot Blast Air Tight Florence, is the reason why the Florence is the only absolute smoke consuming device that has ever been constructed in the history of the burning of bituminous coal.

He Removed the Danger Signal

"I suffered a long time with a very weak back," writes Fred Smith, 225 Main St., Green Bay, Wis. "A few boxes of Foley Kidney Pills completely relieved me of all nervousness and pain in the back, and now I am as strong and well as ever."

One cannot help becoming nervous and feeling tired and worn out when the kidneys fail to filter and throw out of the system the poisonous waste matter that causes kidney trouble and bladder ailments.

Backache is one of Nature's danger signals that the kidneys are clogged up and inactive. It is often followed by rheumatism, annoying bladder or urinary disorders, painful swellings under the eyes, swollen ankles and painful joints.

Foley Kidney Pills get right at the source of trouble. They invigorate the kidneys to healthy action and when the kidneys properly perform their functions the poisonous waste matter is eliminated from the system.

IS A BUSY PLACE

Ellsworth Produce Company Handling a large Amount of Farm Products.

One of the busiest places in our bustling little village is in and around the Ellsworth Produce Company, who handle a majority of the products of the farm in this vicinity.

Hundreds of bushels of beans, potatoes and the various varieties of grains handled each week. At present the potato and bean crop is being marketed. For the past two or three weeks an average of 350 bushels of beans have been marketed every week. Mr. Nelson states that the general average is very good, taking into consideration the past season.

Hunting Notice.

I have made so many hunting notices in the past years that I am sure I can say nothing new at this time. "Camp Ananias" is located 40 miles down the Tahquamenon river from Newberry in the U. P. and the "gang" eight in number, leave for there Thursday, November 4th. Will be away about two weeks. Can bring but one deer home with me this year, and shall work hard for a Big one. There will be no regular session of the probate court until Monday, November 29th. Mrs. Harris will have the keys to the office and will gladly go to Bellaire at anytime for blanks or the examination of records kept in the vault.

Very truly yours,

Farm Brevities

By H. H. Hookworm

Get the young stock used to stables early and save annoyance some stormy night.

Bring the farm tools to shelter and carefully pack away. Too many garages (fence corners) on the ordinary farm.

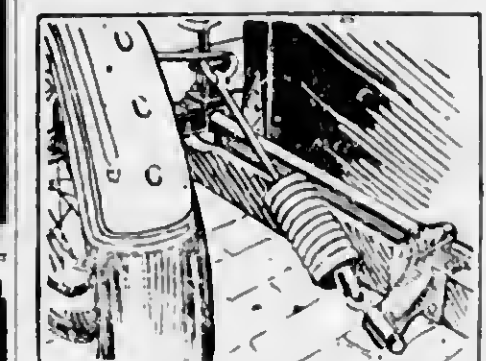

Put oil or grease on all plow shares, hoes, etc., when putting away.

Clean and whitewash the hen-house before winter sets in.

DEVICE FOR AUTOMOBILES.

New Mode of Suspension Eliminates Car Vibration.

An automobile recently seen on the boulevards of Paris attracted much attention by reason of its novel suspension. The underslung body is supported by coiled springs, connected by SPRING SUSPENSION FOR AUTOMOBILES. A bracket to the frame, and to the axle by a large, giving great freedom of vertical movement. This arrangement permits a very low body, with road clearance of only a few inches. It is said the coiled spring absorbs almost all the vibration and that shock absorbers are not necessary with this spring suspension.

BUILDING GOOD ROADS

Commissioner Smith to be Congratulated on the Splendid Work Done.

About seven and three-fourths miles of the new road is now all graded and gravelled the first course and it is expected that about three miles of the road will be regaveled and finished up ready for inspection by the state highway department this year, after which the reward will be paid the township, to apply on the bonds outstanding.

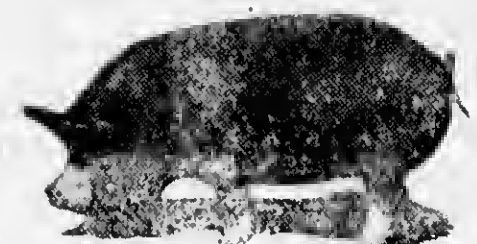

It is rumored that Norwood is to build a stretch of state road to connect with the Banks township road near Atwood. Let the good work go on. Banks township should congratulate itself for having such an efficient road man as Commissioner Wm. P. Smith in charge of the work.

PROFIT IN SELF FED SPRING PIGS

That self feeding of spring pigs highly profitable no longer admits any doubt, provided such animals are intended for early market, writes H. Thorne in the Country Gentleman. Hogs thus fed will make very rapid gains, and recent experiments indicate that if the necessary ingredients are supplied in separate receptacles the pig will balance his ration more economically and will make more rapid gains than when the same ingredients are mixed and doled out by the feeder.

Last summer I was much interested in the feeding operations on the farm of a noted breeder of pure bred hogs. This farm maintained a breeding herd of sixty to eighty brood sows, which were divided into two lots and kept on separate parts of the farm. The two lots of hogs were about the same in all respects and were supplied with the same kinds of feed. Each lot was under the management of a separate herdsman.

One herdsman tried the experiment of fitting up a small self feeder in one corner of the pasture. In which twenty or more sows were running with their litters of pigs six to twelve weeks old. The bopper was fenced against the older hogs and was kept well supplied with shelled corn, tankage and chur-coul, each in separate compartments. At the time of my visit to July the pigs having access to these feeds were fully 40 per cent heavier than the pigs of the same age on the other part of the farm. Furthermore, the mothers of the pigs that had grain ad lib. were in far better condition than the sows in the other lot, owing to the fact that the self fed pigs were inclined to nurse less than the pigs in the other lot.

The Berkshire are supposed to be the only breed of swine of purity of type, pedigree and lineage of more than fifty years. Originating in Berkshire, England, about 150 years ago, at that time their color was a reddish black. After a hundred years of breeding their skin became thinner and their hair shorter, developing a dark plum color. Butchers claim that Berkshire meat is worth more than meat from mongrels when choice cuts are required for retail trade. The hog shown is a Berkshire.

Last year the Iowa station fed five pigs that averaged 214 pounds at each weighing and none of these pigs were placed in a dry lot at eighty days old, weighing forty-five pounds each. The self feeder was supplied with shelled corn, whole oats, tankage, oil-meal, charcoal, salt and ground lime stone. At the start these pigs ate two pounds of corn a day each. The amount consumed gradually increased until at a weight of 225 pounds they were eating nine pounds of corn a day each. Of tankage they consumed varying amounts, usually ranging from a half to three-fourths of a pound daily. After they reached a weight of 225 pounds they ate very little of this concentrate. From this time corn comprised practically their sole ration. Oats were but little relished by the pigs, and but small quantities of alfalfa were eaten. If, however, tankage is not available pigs will utilize more of the oilmeal. Tankage is the cheaper and better source of protein for hog feeding and should be more generally used.

The above results were obtained at a cost of considerably less than 5 cents a pound. With pasture supplement the cost of gains will be materially reduced and slightly more rapid gains will result. The criterion fed hog, however, will not utilize nearly so large a quantity of forage as will the hog receiving only a half or three-quarter ration of grain. In any season corn is pre-eminently the grain the hog prefers.

GRANGE FAIR A GREAT SUCCESS

First Annual Event Brought People From All Sections

Many Good Points Brought Out by Local Speakers—The Prize Winners.

The Ellsworth grange held its first annual fair at Harris hall on Saturday, October 30th. It was a decided success in the minds of all present. Farmers from far and near began gathering in the forenoon, bringing in their vegetables, fruits and other articles for display. The forenoon was spent in arranging the exhibits and preparing for the bounteous chicken-pie dinner which was served promptly at noon in the usual farmer fashion, which everyone likes to partake of. After dinner a short program was carried out. The popular village band rendered two numbers, after which Rev. Bond delivered prayer. DeWitt Patterson gave a pleasing vocal solo which was enjoyed by all.

D. E. Clow was the principal speaker of the afternoon and spoke well on the subject in which the farmer and business man are always interested, "Co-operation." He showed how the Grange and Gleaners, by co-operation, had brought about market conditions in poultry selling by which they had profited greatly. He urged the same action along all other lines of selling, particularly in potatoes and fruit.

He said the farmers themselves were to blame for the poor market for their fruit, having turned anything and everything in the past on the market to such an extent that the buyers were afraid to handle their stuff. This could be done away with by proper handling and by their efforts get back into the good graces of the buyer.

He said that the farmer should patronize the merchant of his own town, telling them that the merchants of Ellsworth were ready to do their part.

If the farmer would deal with the merchant on the same basis as he does with the mail order houses, taking the quality into consideration, the transportation charges, money order or bank draft charges, and time for delivery, that he or any of the Ellsworth merchants would meet the prices of the foreign houses.

In his closing remarks he placed particular stress on the thought that, the farmer and the business man must stand together, they must co-operate in making a better country and village. The farmer and the small town were the backbone of the nation today. As usual, a Ford story closed his remarks.

E. R. Harris in a few fitting remarks in behalf of the grange, thanked the band for their music besides springing a story on them which he said he had long held back for just such an occasion. Prizes were then determined and marked, a few of which are mentioned below:

General display of fruit: Howard Bearas, First; D. E. Carpenter, Second. Ladies collection of fancy work: Mrs. Henry Black, First; Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Clark, Second.

Canned fruit: Wilma Eastcott, First; Mrs. Chellis, Second. Butter making: Mrs. E. Best, First; Mrs. Wm. Eastcott, Second.

Many and varied were the exhibits of fruit and vegetables, nearly all of which received some prize, showing the real worth of this part of Northern Michigan. The school exhibits of the Miles school, Dewitt Patterson, teacher; District No. 4, Maude Best, teacher, and the village school, District No. 9, deserve special mention for the fine display of school work made.

The committee in charge, Wm. Eastcott, W. Chellis, and Peter Wieland are to be congratulated on the success of their efforts and everyone is looking forward to a much larger and better fair next year.

Lots with winter and shade are what the hogs need now.

A strong sheep does not necessarily need to be a large one. In fact, a majority of the strongest sheep are medium in size.

When a horse's manger gets sour it is time somebody was hauled over the coals.

Whether you are keeping sheep for pleasure or profit, your desires will be fully met if your flock is of superior quality.

Irregularity in salting horses may lead to bad results. Let the team go too long without salt and then give plenty and you may have sick horses.

The old idea that frogs are some times rattled down from the upper regions rests upon a silly superstition. The frogs that are now and then found hopping around after a late rain come up from the earth, not down from the clouds. They are simply having a relaxation after being cooped up a long and trying time of drought. New York

ALLIE MOORE AND WIFE LOST

Such is the Opinion of Their Charlevoix Friends and Relatives.

Have Not Been Heard From Since October 21—Boat Thought to be Unseaworthy.

The whereabouts of Allie Moore and wife, who left Charlevoix about a month ago for Detroit, is causing considerable worry and anxiety to their relatives and friends in this city.

Moore and his wife left Charlevoix for Detroit in a small boat called the Sea Wolf II, which he had fitted up especially for the trip. According to reports he was repeatedly cautioned regarding the boat, many being of the opinion that it was unseaworthy and would not stand the trip. Moore, however, gave little heed to the warnings, stating that in his opinion the boat was alright.

After leaving Charlevoix he notified his relatives here at every stop made up to the time of his arrival at Tawas City, October 21. At this port he was towed in by the coastguards, having had some trouble with the engine, making it impossible for him to reach port at this point.

Since leaving Tawas City shortly afterwards he has not been heard from, nor can any trace be found of him. Information received from Harbor Beach, the next port south of Tawas City, states that no boat of their description had been there nor had been seen passing. It was also stated that they didn't think the boat could pass without being observed at the lookout station. Moore did not travel at night, and it is believed by his friends here that he is lost somewhere near this point or has been driven across the lake to the Canadian shore at some point where he has been unable to communicate with his friends in Charlevoix.

Sam Hamilton and son, Ray, left this city a week ago Monday by rail, stopping at all east shore points in an effort to locate the missing boat. They are now in Detroit, found no trace of them on the route to that city, nor has Moore arrived at Detroit by another route.

Up to the time we go to press no information has been received regarding them and it is feared that they are lost, as during the time they would have been making their way south on the east coast the weather was bad, and heavy winds prevailed for several days at a time.

Auction Sales.

Every week the Courier grows in popularity as a medium for advertising auction sales. The reason is that it thoroughly covers the field adjacent to Charlevoix and reaches over 90 per cent of the people in this vicinity. This week's issue contains two sales, as follows:

Thursday, November 18, occurs the sale of the personal property belonging to the estate of the late A. R. Struthers, at the farm home on the Boyne City road, five miles east of Charlevoix. The list is a large one, and the sale will commence at 10:00 a. m. W. E. Byers, auctioneer, F. A. Butler, clerk. See the adv. on page 2.

Friday, November 19, Mrs. I. M. Pulcifer has a sale at her farm three miles south of the Belvedere Hotel, commencing at one o'clock p. m. W. E. Byers will cry the sale and W. J. will handle the paper. Read the adv. on page 5.

Fur-Bearing Animals May Now Be Taken in Compliance with the Game Laws.

Open season for a number of fur-bearing animals began Monday of last week under the state game laws. By their provisions it is lawful to kill beaver from November 1 to November 14, inclusive. Fifteen of these animals may be taken under a special license costing $10. Additional licenses may be issued at the same price. It is unlawful to destroy houses or dams or to have in possession a body or pelt of a beaver without a license seal attached.

The open season on otter, fisher, fox, raccoon, martin and skunk continues from November 1 to March 31, inclusive.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

The people of the United States are grateful to the Infinite Father for their capacity and disposition to appreciate the bounties of nature. Through this appreciation, man cheerfully applies his labor to the earth in order that his bounties may serve as a means for realizing the essential joys of life. Abundant harvests are simply a necessary means to an end. The measuring unit of life is not to be found in bushels of grain, or potatoes, or fruits, or coal, or copper, or silver, or gold, or houses, or lands, but in the laughter of children around the hearthstone, in the love and loyalty of the home. "Home is the nation's safety." In the year nineteen hundred fifteen we are grateful for the benediction that rests upon the American home. In the great Commonwealth of Michigan we are, in common with all the other states, the recipients of the richest blessings. It is eminently fitting that we set apart November twenty-fifth as a special day for Thanksgiving—a day on which we may pray for "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Therefore I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of the State of Michigan, do hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-fifth of November, as a day for all the people of this Commonwealth to celebrate in thanksgiving and prayer.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State this sixth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen, and of the Commonwealth the seventy-ninth.

Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor.
By the Governor:
Coleman C. Vaughan,
Secretary of State.

LITERARY WORK BEGAN FRIDAY

Was a Great Success Last Year in Charlevoix High School.

Students Were Given Their Choice of Subjects This Year—Visitors Always Welcome.

Friday began the literary work of the year. The work of last year was a great success, and proved a benefit to the student body. It gave them greater command of the English language and accomplished a work that could not have been done in the classroom.

The work of this year is of somewhat different character. While the work is compulsory for all students, they were given a choice of literary, scientific, dramatic or debating. In this way it is hoped to get the very best results, because the students will be interested in the section which they choose.

Mr. Vogt and Mr. Aseltine will have charge of the scientific, Miss Northrop and Miss Horst of the literary, Mr. Ewing of the debating and Miss Lombard and Mr. Craig of the dramatic.

This work will be held on the last hours of Friday afternoon, and the faculty and students will be glad at any time to welcome visitors.

MANY UPLIFTING TALKS MADE AT COUNTY S. S. CONVENTION

E. K. Mohr of New Buffalo Says That All Like to Belong to an Organization That is a Winner and Not a Loser—Advises All to Hustle.

I would like to speak a word to four classes here tonight on this subject.

1. Parents. There is a time for you to win every child if you don't neglect it. A Christian mother went to her pastor to talk with him about the salvation of her 12 year old boy, Charlie, and asked the pastor to talk to him about it. "Have you ever talked it over with him?" asked the pastor. "No," said the mother. Then said the pastor, "You go home and ask him to come to Christ and if you fail to reach him I will try." She did as told and Charlie, putting his arms around her neck said, "I have only been waiting for some one to ask me."

2. Those who are advanced in years. Your opportunity is not passed. I stepped off the train at Portland, Michigan, the other day and an old man from Ionia got off with a yoke on his shoulders and on trays, from each end were flowers he had raised to sell to make his living. He was there again at night as I was ready to return and his yoke stood up beside the depot. I went over to look at it and found these words written on it. "My yoke is easy, my burden is light, my Master's will is my delight." Wherever he went he was preaching the gospel in this way. I began talking with him and as he saw I was interested he took from his pocket a little book which he used to preach from, though he could not read nor write. It contained only three pages, one black, one red, and one white and he preached his sermon. "The black represents the life with sin in it, the red represents the blood of Christ which can wash your sins away, and the white shows the condition of the life after the sin has been washed away, with the blood of Christ." He was 82 years old, could not read nor write yet he was doing much for Jesus as he won others.

You are not too old nor too ignorant if you have given your heart to God and let him use you.

3. Teachers. Those we win early in life we not only save their souls but win a long life of service. Some you will win may be a Moody, a Spurgeon or a Torrey.

4. Scholars. If you will give out what your teacher gives you, you may find you can win many souls. Dr. Gordon was preaching an evangelistic sermon and at its close asked all who were interested in their soul's salvation to go to his study to talk it over with him. After all the grown people had shown they were clear concerning their salvation and were ready to come into the church and were dismissed, there remained a little girl. To her he said, "It is time for you to go home." She seemed so disappointed that he promised to talk with her teacher. He did so and found her the nearest ready of any of the class of converts and took her into the church. For a year she was in her place and then she ceased to come. Her father came to Dr. Gordon and asked him to preach her funeral sermon. On his way there he met on the walk a cripple boy crying. The boy's answer to the Dr's question was "I don't see how I can get along without little Mary for I can't go to Sunday School and she always came this way and told the lesson she learned and I have found Jesus." On the steps he met a woman with a similar story. Beside the coffin stood a mother and child. She said, "I don't know how we can get along without little Mary for she taught us to love Jesus." The lesson that has been taught, you may soothe many a heart if you pass it along.

The Boyne Falls quartette gave a fine selection and were called back for another equally as good. The closing address of the evening was by Mr. Mohr, "The Possibilities of the Sunday School Enterprise." "The Sunday School as an enterprise is gigantic like the building of the Panama Canal. Strong business men are attracted to it. J. Wanamaker said, 'If I had my life to live over again I would have more of Sunday School and less of business.'" The possibilities of the Sunday School enterprise are: 1. Its demonstration—what it has proven to be. The first Sunday School was organized in 1780 by Robert Rakes. It was opposed by the church. In the 60's a minister in southern Illinois so opposed it that he said publicly, "There four gates of hell, Temperance, Missions, Sunday School and the Republican Party." The church has at last found out that it could not oppose what God proposes and blesses. Its demonstration is proven by the 150,000 Sunday Schools with their 13,000,000 scholars in America, by 75 per cent of all the churches in the land growing out of them, by 5,000 Sunday Schools in Michigan growing from them, and by the fact that the financial investment of 10 per cent in Sunday Schools has brought 90 per cent of gain to the churches. God's blessing has done "far more exceedingly than we are able to think. God in it made it. God in us makes us. Never let there be an I thought without an I can."

2. Resources. It is full of ability and possibilities because God's blessing is upon it. "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." The one who thinks it is too small a job and the one who thinks he is too nice to be on the job will be superseded by the one who says, "I think I can, and afterwards is enabled to say, 'I thought I could.'"

3. Preparation. Plan a program. Have it ready. Let every person feel that he is there for a purpose.

4. Efficiency. Look after the details. Boys and girls that we had are getting away because we are neglecting opportunities. Efficiency is the motto of the business world today. The waste of former years is being looked after with extreme carefulness. A few years ago the refuse of copper mines was washed into the lakes. They are now making machinery to get out the by-products from the refuse thrown away. The chemical bath separates the silver from the copper. A few years ago 75 per cent of the Sunday School's scholars were soon lost to the cause. Now 1000 scholars from our Sunday Schools come into our churches a day. Efficiency will even send four teachers after one soul.

The Sunday School workers have seen the vision of the old farmer who was at the St. Louis Exposition. His wife tried to get him interested in the picture showing the "Guardian angel" standing on the bridge with its wings covering the break in the railing to protect a child passing over. He did not care to look at it. The artist tried to interest him but all he could get out of the farmer was, "why don't the fool angel mend the gap." They are closing it in the Sunday Schools.

5. The field. The Sunday School is not a field but a force. The world is the field in which two thirds of the people have not heard of Jesus. The church and the Sunday School is the plan and the only one Jesus has to tell this story to the lost world and we are not doing it fast enough. The field is beckoning to us to be ambassadors for the King. Stop trying to run toy mills with a Corliss Engine. Get after the big things. The session was closed by singing and benediction by Rev. Gibbs.

Friday morning session was opened by a promise meeting conducted by Rev. Gibbs, after which Mr. Washburn took charge of a meeting, bringing out the "Lights and Shadows" of Sunday Schools in Charlevoix County.

The address of the morning was by Mr. Mohr on "Our Boys." "There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?" The boy looks so small. He is little among so many big men. An evangelistic meeting was counted a failure because only one boy was won. He turned out to be the great missionary, Robert Moffatt, who opened up Africa for Christ. A Sunday School teacher became discouraged and quit teaching because she only had one boy in her class. He was Joseph Smith who found the great course of America, Mormonism. It would not have been here had she been true to her class of one boy. If we don't want the one boy Satan does, and will set a trap for him. Look at some of the traps he uses.

1. Impure literature. The slimy trail of this venomous serpent is making its way into the best homes. Mr. Comstock in his investigation found lists of 1,600,000 boys and girls of the land to whom firms were sending this kind of literature. Parents, if you love your children select their reading.

2. Cigarettes. More are ruined by the cigarette than by the saloon. Not the boy alone but the girl. Not from the slums alone but from the best families. In our cities 80 per cent of the boys in the slums use them and 83 per cent in the best families. Gen. Torrence says, 95 per cent of the boys in the reform school of Illinois are cigarette fiends. 3. The saloon. It entices millions on the downward road. 4. Impurity. 90 per cent of the boys and girls of our land have not had proper sex instruction. The 90 per cent have come to the point because of lack of proper instruction that some speakers refer to them as human culls. The 10 per cent who have had proper instruction are normal children. Are yours among this 10 per cent? Only 5 per cent of the 8,000,000 young men of our country are church members. 5. The poor room for the boy. Fix up the room for the boy. Put in a bright carpet, light cheery paper, nice curtains, and fine pictures and you will find it the best investment you have ever made for he will not only stay at home nights but bring his boy friends there.

6. Father not a friend to the boy. Be his best chum. "Be honest with him. Give him some things to be his to do with as he will. Don't do as the father who gave his boy a colt that he loved so dearly it was always with him at home. One day the father sold it. It broke the boy's heart. He ran away from home. Never came back.

The church problem is the one to make the true man out of the boy. Get wide awake. Let the boy know that he's wanted. Give him something to do. Go after him. Get after him systematically. Go after him persistently. Never give up. Believe in boys. Don't call them bad. Be interested in what they are interested in, whether it be base ball, pigeons or electricity. Give them something to do for the Sunday School, let them know the requirements, organize them. Know them by name not nickname. Get acquainted with them. Don't "Don't" them.

Teach positively, instead of negatively, or he will think he is not wanted, go into the backyard and take a short cut to the devil. If your house is too good for your boy it should burn. Don't treat all boys alike. Study them as a good farmer does his soil. Allow for animal spirits. Don't try to cram a four-quart boy into a pint cup, but direct his activities into proper channels. Be tactful with boys. Meet them during the week. Invite them to your home. Keep close to them. Sympathize with them; they need it, and miss it when it is withheld. Love your boys. Doctor Sheldon says: "There is nothing in this world but what will yield if you put love enough into it." Get into their hearts and natures through the door of love. Trust the boys. Be happy with them. Smile. There is no religion in a whine. Confide in them. Advise them, but don't scold. Be the kind of man you want them to be.

Reports of officers were given and Boyne City Baptist church decided on for the next annual convention.

Friday afternoon opened with praise service led by Rev. J. M. Gleason of Boyne City. Miss Geneva Rogers and Mrs. Gibbs sang a duet very acceptably. Mr. Mohr led a conference on county work. INJURED HIS EYE Limb Strikes Percy Edwards While Placing Ladder into Tree.

Percy Edwards, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Edwards, narrowly escaped losing the sight of one of his eyes in an accident last week while engaged in pruning their orchard.

Percy was putting up a ladder into one of the trees he was about to prune, when a limb slipped from under the weight of the ladder and struck him across the face and eyes, a twig entering his eye and nearly blinding him. At the time he thought little of the injury, but by Saturday he was forced to seek medical assistance.

Examination showed that a small fragment of the twig had penetrated the pupil of the eye and broken off. This was removed and it is now thought no bad results will occur, although the escape was a narrow one.

The FORESTERS DAUGHTER

A ROMANCE OF THE BEAR TOOTH RANGE

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

SYNOPSIS

Wayland Norcross, an eastern youth seeking health in Colorado, meets Berne McFarlane, called Berrie, typical ranch girl, daughter of the supervising ranger at Bear Tooth forest.

Berrie is greeted by her lover, Cliff Belden, a cowboy, supposed to be interested in a saloon at Meeker's Mill, where Norcross is bound. Berrie guides Norcross to his destination.

A shower intercepts them and the girl gives the youth her raincoat. There is a rough element at Meeker's, and Norcross chooses Landon, the ranger, as his companion. Landon loves Berrie.

Cliff notices Berrie's interest in the tenderfoot and warns him away. He also takes his betrothed to task. She resents this and breaks their engagement.

Neesh, the ranger at Bear Tooth, gives Wayland points on forestry. Berrie's father offers him a place in the service. Berrie decides to go with them over the trail.

They climb the high, rough trail and only make camp when Wayland is on the point of collapse. Night in the open charms Wayland.

Wayland blunders repeatedly. The supervisor comes after the horses which have wandered off. He is detained. Norcross arranges to sleep outside and Berrie inside a tent.

Wayland being ill, Berrie insists that he sleep in the tent. The supervisor doesn't return. They break camp. Wayland is used up on the trail.

They reach the empty cabin of Tony, a ranger. Next day Mr. Moore, a lumberman, his daughter Stona and a notorious gossip, Mrs. Belden, pass. Norcross admits he is the son of a wealthy lumberman.

The supervisor returns and realizes the delicate situation in which his daughter is placed. Berrie, jealous of the Moore girl, decides to go home.

CHAPTER XI.

The Camp on the Pass.

AS soon as she was alone with her father Berrie said, "I'm going home today, dad."

"Going home? What for?"

"I've had enough of it."

"Oh, I don't mind sleeping on the floor," she replied. "But I want to get back. I don't want to meet those men. Another thing, you'd better use Mr. Norcross at the Springs instead of leaving him here with Tony."

"Why so?"

"Well, he isn't quite well enough to run the risk. It's a long way from here to a doctor."

"He seems to be on deck this morning. Besides, I haven't anything in the office to offer him."

"Then send him up to Meeker. Landon needs help, and he's a better forger than Tony anyway."

"I don't know but you're right. Landon is almost as good a hustler as Tony and a much better forester. I thought of sending Norcross up there at first, but he told me that Frank and his gang had it in for him. Of course he's only nominally in the service, but I want him to begin right."

Berrie went farther. "I want him to ride back with me today."

He looked at her with grave inquiry. "Do you think that a wise thing to do? Won't that make more talk?"

"We'll start early and ride straight through."

"You'll have to go by Lost Lake, and that means a long, hard hike. Can he stand it?"

"If I find we can't make it I'll pull into a ranch. But I'm sure we can."

When Wayland came in the supervisor inquired, "Do you feel able to ride back over the hill today?"

"Entirely so. It isn't the riding that uses me up, it is the walking, and, besides, as a candidate for promotion I must obey orders—especially orders to march."

They breakfasted hurriedly and while McFarlane and Tony were trifling in the horses Wayland and Berrie set the cabin to rights. Working thus side by side, she recovered her domination over him and at the same time regained her own cheerful self confidence.

"You're a wonder!" he exclaimed as he watched her deft adjustment of the dishes and furniture. "You're quite dextrous."

"I have to be to hold my job," she laughingly replied. "A fellow must play all the parts when he's up here."

It was still early morning as they mounted and set off up the trail, but Moore's camp was still, and as McFarlane turned in—much against Berrie's will—the lumberman and his daughter both came on to meet them. "Come in and have some breakfast."

said Stona, with earnest directness while her eyes met Wayland's glance with mocking glee.

"Thank you," said McFarlane, "we can't stop. I'm going to set my daughter on the trail she had been a joy; as a jealous sweetheart she was less admirable. He realized perfectly that this return journey was of her arrangement, not McFarlane's, and, while he was not resentful of her care, he was in doubt of the outcome. It hurried him into a further intimacy which might prove embarrassing."

At the camp by the lake the supervisor became sharply commanding. "Now, let's throw these packs on lively. It will be slippery on the high trail, and you'll just naturally have to hit leather hard and keep jouncing if you reach the wagon road before dark. But you'll make it."

"Make it?" said Berrie. "Of course we'll make it. Don't you worry about that for a minute. Once I get out of the green timber the dark won't worry me. We'll push right through."

In packing the camp stuff on the saddles Berrie, almost as swift and powerful as her father, acted with perfect understanding of every task, and Wayland's admiration of her skill increased mightily.

She insisted on her father's turning back. "We don't need you," she said. "I can find the pass."

McFarlane's faith in his daughter had been tested many times, and yet he was a little loath to have her start off on a trail new to her. He argued against it briefly, but she laughed at his fears. "I can go anywhere you can," she said. "Stand clear!" With final admonition he stood clear.

"Goodby!" he called. "If you meet Nash hurry him along. Moore is anxious to run those lines. Keep in touch with Landon, and if anybody turns up from the district office say I'll be back on Friday. Good luck!"

"Same to you. So long!"

Berrie led the way, and Norcross fell in behind the pack horses, feeling as unimportant as a small boy at the heels of a dress parade. His girl companion was so competent, so self-reliant and so sure that nothing he could say or do assisted in the slightest degree. Her leadership was a curiously close reproduction of her father's unharmed and graceful action. Her seat in the saddle was as easy as Landon's, and her eyes were alert to every rock and stream in the road. She was at home here, where the other girl would have been a bewildered child, and his words of praise lifted the shadow from her face.

Wayland called out, "The air feels like Thanksgiving morning, doesn't it?"

"It is Thanksgiving for me, and I'm going to get a grouse for dinner," she replied, and in less than an hour the snip of her rifle made good her promise.

After leaving the upper lake she turned to the right and followed the course of a swift and splendid stream which came churning through a cheerless, mossy swamp of spruce trees. Inexperienced as he was, Wayland knew that this was not a well marked trail, but his confidence in his guide was too great to permit of any worry over the pass, and he amused himself by watching the water robins as they flitted from stone to stone in the torrent, and in calculating just where he would drop a line for trout if he had time to do so, and in recovered serenity enjoyed his ride. Gradually he put aside his perplexities concerning the future, permitting his mind to prefigure nothing but his duties with Landon at Meeker's mill.

He was rather glad of the decision to send him there, for it promised absorbing sport. "I shall see how Landon and Belden work out their problem," he said. He had no fear of Frank Meeker now. "As a forest guard with official duties to perform I can meet that young savage on other and more nearly equal terms," he assured himself.

The trail grew slippery and in places ran full of water. "But there's a bottom somewhere," Berrie confidently declared, and pushed ahead with resolute intent. It was noon when they rose above timber and entered upon the wide, smooth slopes of the pass. Snow filled the grass here, and the wind, keen, cutting, unblinded, came out of the desolate west with snow-fury, but the sun occasionally shone through the clouds with vivid splendor. "It is December now," shouted Wayland as he put on his slicker and covered low to his saddle. "It will be January soon."

"We will make it Christmas dinner," she laughed, and her glowing good humor warmed his heart. She was entirely her cheerful self again.

As they rose the view became more affluent, wintry, sparkling. The great clouds, drifting like ancient warships heavy with ornament, sent down chilly showers of hail over the frosted gold of the grassy slopes, but when the shadows passed the sunlight descended in silent curtains deliciously spring like. The conies squeaked from the rocky ridges and a brace of eagles clinging about a lone crag, as if exulting in their sovereign mastery of the air screamed in shrill ecstatic din. The sheer cliffs on their shadowed sides were violently purple. Everywhere the landscape exhibited crashing contrasts of primary pigments which bit into consciousness like the flare of a mine tail lamp.

It was nearly 2 o'clock when they began to drop down behind the rocky bridges of the eastern slope, and soon in the bottom of a warm and sheltered hollow just at timber line, Berrie drew her horse to stand and slipped from the saddle. "We'll rest here an hour," she said, "and cook our grouse, or are you too hungry to wait?"

"I can wait," he answered dreamily. "But it seems as if I had never eaten."

"Well, then, we'll save the grouse till tomorrow, but I'll make some coffee. You bring some water while I start a fire."

And so, while the tired horses cropped the russet grass, she pulled some ter over the divide. She has had enough camping, and Norcross is pretty well battered up, so I'm going to help them across. I'll be back tonight and we'll take our turn up the valley tomorrow. Nash will be here then."

Berrie did not mind her father's explanation. On the contrary, she took a distinct pleasure in letting the other girl know of the long and intimate day she was about to spend with her young lover.

Stona, too, adroit to display her disappointment, expressed polite regret. "I hope you won't get storm bound," she said, showing her white teeth in a mocking smile.

"If there is any sign of a storm we won't cross," declared McFarlane. "We're going round by the lower pass, anyhow. If I'm not here by dark you may know I've stayed to set 'em down at the mill."

There was charm in Stona's alert pose and in the neatness of her camp dress. Her dairy tent, with its stools and rugs, made the wilderness seem but a park. She reminded Norcross of the troops of courtiers of the Tyrol, and her tent was of a kind to harmonize with the tea houses on the path to the summit of the Matterhorn. Then, too, something triumphantly feminine shone in her bright eyes and glowed in her softly rounded cheeks. Her hand was little and pointed, not fitted like Berrie's for tightening a cinch or wielding an ax, and as he said "Goodby" he added, "I hope I shall see you again soon," and at the moment he meant it.

"We'll return to the Springs in a few days," she replied. "Come and see us. Our bungalow is on the other side of the river. And you too," she addressed Berrie, but her tone was so conventional ally polite that the ranch girl, burning with jealous heat, made no reply.

McFarlane led the way to the lake rapidly and in silence. The splendors of the foliage, subdued by the rains; the grandeur of the peaks, the song of the glorious stream, all were lost on Berrie, for she now felt herself to be nothing but a big, clumsy, coarse hauled tomboy. Her worn gloves, her faded skirt and her man's shoes had been made hateful to her by that smug, graceful, play acting tourist with the cool, keen eyes and smirking lips. "She pretends to be a kitten, but she isn't. She's a sly growl-up cat," she bitterly accused, but she could not deny the charm of her personality.

Wayland was forced to acknowledge that Berrie in this dark mood was not the delightful companion she had hitherto been. Something sweet and cordial had gone out of their relationship, and he was too keen witted not to know what it was. He estimated precisely the value of the malleable-parting words of Stona Moore.

That Berrie was suffering and that her jealousy touchingly proved the depth of her love for him brought consolation, only temporarily. He was seeking such diversion. As a companion on the trail she had been a joy; as a jealous sweetheart she was less admirable. He realized perfectly that this return journey was of her arrangement, not McFarlane's, and, while he was not resentful of her care, he was in doubt of the outcome. It hurried him into a further intimacy which might prove embarrassing.

At the camp by the lake the supervisor became sharply commanding. "Now, let's throw these packs on lively. It will be slippery on the high trail, and you'll just naturally have to hit leather hard and keep jouncing if you reach the wagon road before dark. But you'll make it."

"Make it?" said Berrie. "Of course we'll make it. Don't you worry about that for a minute. Once I get out of the green timber the dark won't worry me. We'll push right through."

In packing the camp stuff on the saddles Berrie, almost as swift and powerful as her father, acted with perfect understanding of every task, and Wayland's admiration of her skill increased mightily.

She insisted on her father's turning back. "We don't need you," she said. "I can find the pass."

McFarlane's faith in his daughter had been tested many times, and yet he was a little loath to have her start off on a trail new to her. He argued against it briefly, but she laughed at his fears. "I can go anywhere you can," she said. "Stand clear!" With final admonition he stood clear.

"Goodby!" he called. "If you meet Nash hurry him along. Moore is anxious to run those lines. Keep in touch with Landon, and if anybody turns up from the district office say I'll be back on Friday. Good luck!"

"Same to you. So long!"

Berrie led the way, and Norcross fell in behind the pack horses, feeling as unimportant as a small boy at the heels of a dress parade. His girl companion was so competent, so self-reliant and so sure that nothing he could say or do assisted in the slightest degree. Her leadership was a curiously close reproduction of her father's unharmed and graceful action. Her seat in the saddle was as easy as Landon's, and her eyes were alert to every rock and stream in the road. She was at home here, where the other girl would have been a bewildered child, and his words of praise lifted the shadow from her face.

Wayland called out, "The air feels like Thanksgiving morning, doesn't it?"

"It is Thanksgiving for me, and I'm going to get a grouse for dinner," she replied, and in less than an hour the snip of her rifle made good her promise.

After leaving the upper lake she turned to the right and followed the course of a swift and splendid stream which came churning through a cheerless, mossy swamp of spruce trees. coffee and told him some bread and meat, while he sat by watching her and absorbing the beauty of the scene, the charm of the hour. "It is exactly like a warm afternoon in April," he said, "and here are some of the spring flowers."

"There now, sit by and eat," she said, with humor, and in perfectly restored tranquillity they ate and drank, with no thought of critics or of rivals. They were alone, and content to be so. It was deliciously sweet and restful there in that sunny hollow on the breast of the mountain. The wind swept through the worn branches of the dwarfed spruce with immemorial wistfulness, but these young souls heard it only as a far off song. Side by side on the soft Alpine clover they rested and talked, looking away at the shining peaks, and down over the dark green billows of fir beneath them. Half the forest was under their eyes at the moment, and the man said: "Is it not magnificent? It makes me proud of my country. Just think, all this glorious spread of hill and valley is under your father's direction—I may say, under your direction, for I notice it does just about what you tell him to do."

"You've noticed that?" she laughed. "If I were a man I'd rather be supervisor of this forest than congressman."

"So would I," he agreed. "Nash says you are the supervisor. I wonder if your father realizes how efficient you are? Does he ever sorrow over you not being a boy?"

Her eyes shone with mirth. "Not that I can notice. He 'pears contented."

"You're a good deal like a son to me," he said.

him, I imagine. You can do about all that a boy can do, anyhow—more than I could ever do. Does he realize how much you have to do with the management of his forest? I've never seen your like. I really believe you could carry on the work as well as he."

"She flushed with pleasure. "You seem to think I'm a district forester in disguise."

"I have eyes, Miss Supervisor, and also ears, which leads me to ask, Why don't you clean out that arson gang? Landon is sure there's a crooked work going on at that mill—certainly that open bar is a disgraceful and corrupting thing."

Her face clouded. "We've tried to cut out that saloon, but it can't be done. You see, it's on a patented claim. The claim was bogus, of course, and we've made complaint, but the matter is hung up and that gives 'em a chance to go on."

"Well, let's not talk of that. It's too delicious an hour for any question of business. It is a moment for poetry. I wish I could write what I feel this moment. Why don't we camp here and watch the sun go down and the moon rise? From our lofty vantage ground the coming of dawn would be an epic."

"We mustn't think of that," she protested. "We must be going."

"Not yet. The hour is too perfect. It may never come again. The wind in the pines, the sunshine, the butterflies on the clover—my heart aches with the beauty of it. It's been a wonderful trip. Even that staggering walk in the rain had its splendid quality. I couldn't see the poetry in it then, but I do now. These few days have made us comrades, haven't they—comrades of the trail?"

CHAPTER XII. The Death Grapple.

"YOU have been very considerate of me, Miss Supervisor," Wayland took her hand. "I've never seen such hands. They are like steel and yet they are feminine."

"She drew her hands away. "I'm ashamed of my hands—they are so big and rough and clumsy."

"They're brown, of course, and calloused—a little—but they are not big and they are beautifully modeled." He looked at the girl of the forest speculatively. "I am wondering how you would look in conventional dress."

"Do you mean?" She hesitated. "I'd look like a hawk in one of those low-necked outfits. I'd never dare—and those tight skirts would sure cripple me."

"Oh, no, they wouldn't. You'd have to modify your stride a little, but you'd negotiate it. You're equal to anything."

"You're making fun of me!"

"No, I'm not. I'm in earnest. You're the kind of American girl that can go anywhere and do anything. My sisters would mortgage their share of the golden streets for your abounding health—and so would I."

"You are all right now," she smiled. "You don't look or talk as you did."

"It's this sunlight." He lifted a spread hand as if to clutch and hold something. "I feel it soaking into me like some magical oil. No more moping and whining for me. I've proved that hardship is good for me."

"Don't crow till you're out of the woods. It's a long ride down the hill and going down is harder on the two derfoot than going up."

"I'm no longer a tenderfoot. All I need is another trip like this with you and I shall be a master trailer."

cloud. The sun is coming out again. I have perfect confidence in your woodcraft. Why not spend another night on the trail? It may be our last trip together."

He tempted her strongly, so frank and boyish and levitable were his glances and his words. But she was vaguely afraid of herself, and though the long ride at the moment seemed hard and dull the thought of her mother waiting decided her action.

"No, no!" she responded firmly. "We have wasted too much time already. We must ride."

He looked up at her with challenging glance. "Suppose I refuse—suppose I decide to stay here?"

Upon her as he talked a sweet hesitation fell, a dream which held more of happiness than she had ever known.

"It is a long, hard ride," she thought, "and another night on the trail will not matter." And so the moments passed on velvet feet, and still she lingered, reluctant to break the spell.

Suddenly into their idyllic drowse a content, so sweet, so youthful and so pure of heart, broke the sound of a horse's hurrying, clashing steel shod feet, and, looking up, Berrie saw a mounted man coming down the mountain side with furious, reckless haste.

"It is Cliff!" she cried out. "He's on our trail!" And into her face came a look of alarm. Her lips paled; her eyes widened.

"He's mad—he's dangerous! Leave him to me," she added. There was something so sinister to the rider's disregard of nature and tree and pace, something so menacing in the forward thrust of his body, that Berrie was able to divine his wrath and was smitten into irresolution, all her hardy, boyish self reliance swallowed up in the weakness of the woman.

She forgot the pistol at her belt and awaited the assault with rigid pose.

As Belden neared their Norcross also perceived that the rider's face was distorted with passion and that his glance was not directed upon Berrie, but upon himself, and he braced himself for the attack.

Leaving his saddle with one flying leap, which the cowboy practices at play, Belden hurled himself upon his rival with the fury of a panther.

The slender youth went down before the big rancher as though struck by a catapult, and the force of his fall against the stony earth stunned him so that he lay beneath his enemy as helpless as a child.

Belden snarled between his teeth. "I told you I'd kill you, and I will!"

But this was not to be. Berrie suddenly recovered her native force. With a cry of pain, of anger, she flung herself on the maddened man's back. Her hands encircled his neck like a collar of bronze.

"Let go!" she commanded, with deadly intensity. "Let go or I'll choke the life out of you! Let go, I say!"

He raised a hand to beat her off, but she was too strong, too desperate to be driven away. She was as blind to pain as a mother eagle and bent above him so closely that he could not bring the full weight of his fist to bear. With one determined hand still clutching his throat, she ran the fingers of her other hand into his hair and twisted his head upward with a power which he could not resist. And so, looking into his upturned ferocious eyes, she repeated with remorseless fury, "Let go, I say!"

His swollen face grew rigid, his mouth gaped, his tongue protruded, and at last, releasing his hold on his victim, he slumped back with a final desperate effort. "I'll kill you, too!" he gasped.

Up to this moment the girl had felt no fear of herself, but now she resorted to other weapons. Snatching her pistol from its holster, she leveled it at his forehead. "Stop!" she said, and something in her voice froze him into calm. He was not a fiend; he was not a deliberate assassin; he was only a jealous, despairing, insane lover, and as he looked into the face he knew so well and realized that nothing but hate and deadly resolution lit the eyes he had so often kissed his heart gave way, and, dropping his head, he said: "Kill me if you want to. I've nothing left to live for."

There was something unreal, appalling in this sudden reversion to weakness.

He surrendered it to her, and she threw it aside, then turned to Wayland, who was lying white and still with face upturned to the sky. With a moan of anguish she bent above him and called upon his name. He did not stir, and when she lifted his head to her, lap his hair, streaming with blood, stained her dress. She kissed him and called again to him, then turned with accusing frenzy to Belden: "You've killed him! Do you hear? You've killed him!"

The agony, the fury of hate in her voice reached the heart of the conquered man. He raised his head and stared at her with mingled fear and remorse. And so across that limp body these two souls, so lately lovers, looked into each other's eyes as though nothing but words of hate and loathing had ever passed between them. The girl saw in him only a savage, vengeful, bloodthirsty beast; the man confronted in her an accusing angel.

"I didn't mean to kill him," he muttered.

"Yes, you did! You meant it. You crushed his life out with your big hands—and now I'm going to kill you for it!"

A fierce enmity had come upon her. Some far-off ancestral deed of passion called for blood revenge. She lifted the weapon with steady hand and pointed it at his heart.

His fear passed as his wrath had passed. His head dropped, his glance wandered. "Shoot!" he commanded suddenly. "I'd sooner die than live—now."

His words, his tone, brought back to her a vision of the man he had seemed when she first met and admired him. Her hand fell, the woman in her reasserted itself. A wave of weakness, of indecision, of passionate grief overwhelmed her. "Oh, Cliff!" she moaned. "Why did you do it? He was so gentle and sweet."

He did not answer. His glance wandered to his horse, acreoly cropping the grass in utter disregard of this tumultuous human drama, but the wind, less luscious than the brute, swept through the grove of dwarfed, distasteful pines with a desolate, sympathetic moan which filled the man's heart with a new and exalted sorrow. "You're right," he said. "I was crazy. I deserve killing."

But Berrie was now too deep in her own desolation to care what he said or did. She kissed the cold lips of the still youth, murmuring passionately, "I didn't care to live without you; I shall go with you!"

Berrie's hand was on her wrist before she could raise the weapon. "Don't, for God's sake; don't do that! He may not be dead!"

She responded but dully to the suggestion. "No, no! He's gone. His breath is gone."

"Maybe not. Let me see."

Again she bent to the quiet face on which the sunlight fell with mocking splendor. It seemed all a dream till she felt once more the stain of his blood upon her hands. It was all so incredibly sudden. Only just now he was exulting over the warmth and beauty of the day—and now—

How beautiful he was. He seemed asleep. The conies crying from their runways suddenly took on poignant pathos. They appeared to be grieving with her, but the eagles spoke of revenge.

He surrendered it to her, and she threw it aside, then turned to Wayland, who was lying white and still with face upturned to the sky. Again she bent to the quiet face on which the sunlight fell with mocking splendor. It seemed all a dream till she felt once more the stain of his blood upon her hands. It was all so incredibly sudden. Only just now he was exulting over the warmth and beauty of the day—and now—

How beautiful he was. He seemed asleep. The conies crying from their runways suddenly took on poignant pathos. They appeared to be grieving with her, but the eagles spoke of revenge.

A sharp cry, a note of joy sprang from her lips. "He is alive! I saw his eyelids quiver! Quick! Bring some water!"

The man leaped to his feet and, running down to the pool, filled his sombrero with icy water. He was as eager now to save his rival as he had been mad to destroy him. "Let me help," he pleaded. But she would not permit him to touch the body.

Again, while splashing the water upon his face, the girl called upon her love to return. "He hears me!" she exclaimed to her enemy. "He is breathing now! He is opening his eyes!"

The wounded man did, indeed, open his eyes, but his look was a blank, uncomprehending stare, which plunged her back into despair. "He doesn't know me!" she said, with piteous accent. She now perceived the source of the blood upon her arm. It came from a wound in the boy's head which had been dashed upon a stone.

The sight of this wound brought back the blaze of accusing anger to her eyes. "See what you did!" she said, with cold malignity. Then by sudden shift she bent to the sweet face in her arms and kissed it passionately. "Open your eyes, darling. You must not die. I won't let you die! Can't you hear me? Don't you know where you are?"

He opened his eyes once more, quietly, and looked up into her face with a faint, drowsy smile. He could not yet locate himself in space and time, but he knew her and was comforted.

Slowly the youth's eyes took on expression. "Are we still on the hill?" he asked.

"Yes, dearest," she assured him. Then to Belden. "He knows where he is."

Wayland again struggled with reality. "What has happened to me?" "You fell and hurt your head."

He turned slightly and observed the other man looking down at her with dark and tragic glance. "Hello, Belden," he said feebly. "How came you here?"

Then nothing Berrie's look, he added, "I remember. He tried to kill me." He again searched his antagonist's face. "Why didn't you finish the job?"

The girl tried to turn his thought aside. "It's all right now, darling. He won't make any more trouble. Don't mind him. I don't care for anybody now you are coming back to me."

Wayland wonderfully regarded the face of the girl. "And you are you hurt?"

"No, I'm not hurt. I am perfectly happy now." She turned to Belden with quick, comfortable command. "Lead the horses and set up the tent. We won't be able to leave here tonight."

He rose with instant obedience, glad of a chance to serve her, and soon had the tent pegged to its place and the bedding unrolled. Together they lifted the wounded youth and laid him upon his blankets beneath the low canvas roof which seemed heavenly helpful to Belden.

"There!" she said carelessly. "Now you are safe, no matter whether it rains or not."

He smiled. "It seems I'm to have my way after all. I hope I shall be able to see the sun rise. I've sort of lost my interest in the sunset."

"Now, Cliff," she said as soon as the camp was in order and a fire started, "I reckon you'd better ride on. I haven't any further use for you."

"Don't say that, Berrie," he pleaded. "I can't leave you here alone with a sick man. Let me stay and help."

He smiled. "It seems I'm to have my way after all. I hope I shall be able to see the sun rise. I've sort of lost my interest in the sunset."

"Don't say that, Berrie," he pleaded. "I can't leave you here alone with a sick man. Let me stay and help."

She looked at him for a long time before she replied. "I shall never be able to look at you again without hating you," she said. "I shall always remember you as you looked when you were killing that boy. So you'd better ride on and keep a-riding. I'm going to forget all this just as soon as I can, and I don't help me any to have you around. I never want to see you or hear your name again."

"You don't mean that, Berrie?"

"Yes, I do," she asserted bitterly. "I mean just that. So saddle up and pull out. All I ask of you is to say nothing about what has happened here. You'd better leave the state. If Wayland should get worse it might go hard with you."

He accepted his banishment. "All right. If you feel that way I'll ride. But I'd like to do something for you before I go. I'll pile up some wood."

"No. I'll take care of that." And without another word of farewell she turned away and re-entered the tent.

Mounting his horse with painful slowness, as though suddenly grown old, the relieved assassin rode away up the mountain, his head bent low, his eyes upon the ground.

A man saw a waiter in a restaurant spill a tureen of soup over a young lady's white gown. The young lady, instead of flying into a passion, smiled. She said it didn't matter. She continued to eat and talk as tho nothing had happened. This so impressed the man that he got an introduction to the young lady, proposed to her at the end of a month or so, and was accepted. Some time after the marriage he spoke of the tomato-soup accident. "I shall never forget it," said the bride, "your conduct," said the man, "was admirable." "I remember," she said, "that I did behave very well at the time; but I wish you could have seen the marks of my teeth on the bedpost that night."

Some people seem to think that the public librarian should be able to answer any question asked of her. An hour in the home library brought forth the following queries:

"How tall was prehistoric man?"
"How old, I pray, was Sister Ann?"
"What should you do if cats had fits?"
"What woman first invented mitts?"
"Who said, 'To labor is to pray'?"
"How much did Daniel Lambert weigh?"
"Should you spell it 'wo' or 'woe'?"
"What is the fare to Kokomo?"
"Is Clark's name really, truly Champ?"
"Can you lend me a postage-stamp?"
"Have you the rhymes of Edward Lear?"
"What wages do they give you here?"
"What dictionary is the best?"
"Did Brummel wear a satin vest?"
"How do you spell 'anaemic,' please?"
"What is a Gorgonzola cheese?"
"Who ferried souls across the Styx?"
"What is the square of ninety-six?"
"Are oysters good to eat in March?"
"Are green bananas full of starch?"
"Where is that book I used to see?"
"I guess you don't remember me."
"Haf' you der Hohenzollerspiel?"
"Where shall I put this apple-peel?"
"Say, Miss where's the telephone?"
"Now, which is right, to 'lend' or 'loan'?"
"How do you use this catalogue?"
"Oh, hear that noise! Is that my dog?"
"Have you a book called 'Shapes of Fears'?"
"You mind if I leave baby here?"

Pat was called into court to testify to a walk that he had with the defendant in a civil suit, and everything went along as swimmingly as a flock of bullfrogs until the lawyer attempted to bring out the important points of the conversation. "Now, then, Pat," said he encouragingly, "tell the court what you and the defendant talked about." "Yis, sor," answered Pat willingly. "We talked about fifteen minutes. 'No, no, no,'" interrupted the lawyer. "I mean what did you and the defendant talk over?" "Yis, sor," was the rejoinder of Pat. "We talked over the telephone sor."

The village preacher was out calling. "Good morning, Mrs. Stubbins," said the parson; "is your husband at home?" He's home, sir, but he's abed," replied Mrs. Stubbins, who had just hung a pair of recently patched trousers on the clothesline. "How is it he didn't come to church on Sunday? You know we must have our hearts in the right place." "Lord, sir," retorted the faithful wife, "his heart's all right. It's his trousers."

A village housekeeper quite lost her temper and visited the grocery store. "For some time past I've been buying a dozen eggs every week at this store, and I invariably find two bad ones in every dozen. Something's got to be done about it." "Well," said the new clerk naively, and with a quiet smile, "mebbe if you only bought half-a-dozen you'd only get one bad one."

THEATRICAL

"The Melting Pot"

The fineness of the Cort Film Corporation's first contribution to the film world makes the entry of this concern into film circles a notable one. "The Melting Pot," as produced by this company in six reels with Walker Whiteside playing the role of David, which role he made famous on the speaking stage, is an offering that reflects distinct credit upon all concerned in its making. Realism is the note struck early in the first reel and its vibrato does not cease until after the flying of Old Glory in the concluding scene.

No finer screen portrayal has been given than that of "David" by Walker Whiteside. It is to be hoped that this, his initial camera performance, will be followed by many more screen appearances. He is fortunate in the possession of all the graces yet none of the faults, that lend themselves to the actor's first portrayal on the picture screen. His work, his features, his garb—all are expressive of the young Jew of high oriental quality attributed to David.

There is a great amount of dramatic worth to the scenes in which David figures, and he does them full justice.

Valentine Grant as Vera Ravendal gives ideal support to Mr. Whiteside. She causes the character of Vera to stand for individualism and it is one that merits the "Well done" of critic and public. Fletcher Harvey as Baron Ravendal, father of Vera, is well cast in this role, the dignity of which he sustains by his very fine portrayal of the man who saw to the carrying out of the command of the Russian ruler, which made the Easter a black one with the horror of the Kishineff massacre.

Henry Bergman as Mendel Quixano, David's uncle, and Julia Hurley as Frau Quixano, are equally fine in their realistic work. Harold Crane as Quincy Davenport and Henry Leone as Herr Papelmeister, music instructor, complete a cast of individual and collective merit.

James Vincent and Oliver D. Bailey are responsible for the picture's commendable direction, and Catherine Carr for its photo-dramatization. The types which go toward making the scenes of massacre, tabernacle and steorage exceptional ones, were gathered from New York's great East Side and are themselves ingredients of the great melting pot by which name this America of ours is now known.

This film will be produced at the Majestic Theater, Friday evening, November 12.

Money-Saving Harness Specials

We told you last week to look out for an eye-opener in the line of special bargains. This week it will be in the harness line. The price of leather has gone way up, consequently the prices of harness have also gone up. Harness bought at today's prices are in some cases 25 per cent higher than a year ago. But we bought a good stock of harness before the raise in price and can sell them to you practically at the old price. This week we are offering two specials in harness. Our advice is to buy now, as leather will surely go higher. Note what we have for you.

Special No. 1.

HEAVY WORK HARNESS—Bridles 3 in cheeks with nose band; sensible blind; 3 inch flat side reins 1 inch by 20 feet; breast straps 1 1/2 inch; martingales 1 1/2 inch; both kinds of hames; traces 1 1/2 inch by 6 feet with heel chains; 1 1/2 inch side straps; spread straps 2 inch with rings; 3 inch tie straps; trimmed. You will pay from $54.00 to $58.00 for this harness of other dealers, our special price

Special No. 2.

SINGLE DRIVING HARNESS—Bridles 3 inch, box loop cheeks; patent leather blinds; double stitched nose band; lines 3 inch fronts with 1 1/2 inch hand parts; 4 in. padded saddle; 1 1/2 in. shaft tugs with box loops; hame tugs 1 1/2 inch, box loops and harness leather ends; 1 1/2 inch traces; 1 inch side straps; 3 inch martingales, full nickel or brass trimmed. One of the best bargains we have ever had, our special price

$48.00 | $18.00

Other Single Driving Harness from $14 to $18

The above prices mean a saving to you of from $6.00 to $10.00. If we had not bought before the raise of price, we could not sell at these figures. We have a few set at the above prices, and it is safe to say that they will not last long. Better buy during the next week, while the sale is on.

It is the aim of the Courier management to obtain as large a subscription list as possible before the extreme cold weather sets in. People desiring their names placed on the list can do so either through Mr. Jeffery or G. C. Townsend at the Citizens' Bank. The Ellsworth Section of the Courier will be the liveliest two pages (possibly three or four) of any paper in Northern Michigan before the first of the year. Do your part—help all you can.

At this time and age of life if you want more business you must go after it. That is just what the editor of the Charlevoix Courier is doing. While his views and feelings towards Charlevoix have not changed in the least, nor has he in any sense of the word "sold out the town," a term used by some of those who are green eyed with jealousy at the success he has made of his business, but just expanded his beat enough to take in some of the very best territory that he has never before covered.
Some editors cannot and will not see

PROHIBITION VICTORIES.

(Excerpta from the address of Miss Anna A. Gordon, president National Woman's Christian Temperance Union before the forty-second annual convention of that organization, held in Seattle, Wash., October 9-14, 1915.)

Looking backward over the past twenty months and forward to the year 1916 one might epitomize the temperance movement in retrospect as "a movement of victorious yesterdays and confident tomorrows." These months chronicle an unprecedented number of prohibition victories. The temperance transformation of Russia;
the anti-liquor measures in effect in Garman, French and English military circles; the complete abolition of alcohol in the United States navy and in the Panama Canal zone; the outlawing of the liquor traffic in Virginia, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa, Alabama and South Carolina; the majority vote for state-wide prohibition in both branches of Utah's legislature; the triumph of the enemies of the saloon in a large number of counties and cities; the upholding by the United States Supreme court of the constitutionality of the prohibition provision of the Indian treaties—making one-fifth of Minnesota dry; the victorious prohibition elections in forty-five of Minnesota's counties; the battle royal for prohibition in the District of Columbia; the total abstinence rules enforced by many industrial and railroad corporations; the decrease at the rate of $1,250,000 a month of the internal revenue collections on distilled spirits despite the fact that wines are paying a high tax as a result of the emergency war tax enacted by the last congress; the enactment in prohibition states of stricter enforcement laws;

the discussion of total abstinence and prohibition by press and popular magazines, and the marked decrease of their liquor advertising; the growth of antialcohol sentiment in the medical world—these, with the indorsement of national constitutional prohibition by hundreds of influential organizations and the outspoken declarations of men prominent in the official and political life of the United States and other nations in favor of prohibition and total abstinence, have given a marvelous impetus to the movement for the banishment of John Barleycorn from the business, the social, and the political life of the civilized world. The majority vote on the Sheppard-Hobson bill in the United States house of representatives on December 22, 1914, even though it fell short of a decisive victory, was a triumph for nation-wide prohibition.

Because the alcohol disease is the deepest-seated, most chronic organic disease known to the body politic and body social, the permanent cure must be not only organic state legislation, but organic national legislation. The object of a national prohibition amendment is to destroy the agency that debauches the youth of the land. The W. C. T. U. agrees with Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson when he asserts: "The liquor trust is also enough to know that it cannot perpetuate its sway by depending on debauching grown people, so it uses an organic method of teaching the young to drink. We apply exactly the same method to destroy the traffic. We do not try to make old drinkers stop drinking, but we do aim to put a stop to the systematic, organized debauching of our youth through thousands and tens of thousands of agencies throughout the land."

It is not difficult for the student of temperance history to account for the deep conviction and the earnest work of many men and women who today are foremost in the great struggles against the drink monopoly. The boy who two score years ago was taught by a W. C. T. U. mother at the twilight hours to offer his childlike prayer for the temperance cause, as he has hand rested tenderly upon his little head, is today a temperance warrior battling against home's most relentless foe. Boys and girls who twenty-five and thirty years ago were taught by white-ribboners to shout, "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up!" and whose heads, hearts, hands and feet received temperance training in public school, Sunday school, and Loyal Temperance Legion, are grown up, and are rapidly dethroning King Alcohol.

The history of our reform proves that it is well-nigh impossible to take prohibition from a state constitution when once placed there by the voters of a commonwealth. Constitutional prohibition is not dependent upon party politics. Unlike a statutory law it is not at the mercy of each incoming legislature. The liquor traffic constantly defies the laws of the prohibition states. Nothing short of a nation-wide prohibition will give to these states the power to effectively enforce their prohibition laws.

DECEPTIVE APPEARANCE.

The appearance of health among beer drinkers is deceptive. The congested ruddy face is an index of the paralyzed blood vessels of the brain, and the faulty control of the circulation. The increased deposit of fat is of degenerative cells lacking in vitality.—T. D. Cruthers, M. D.

School Commissioner's Notes

Six thousand teachers enrolled at the Saginaw meeting; a program that was worth while and an enthusiasm that will spread throughout the state.

The Walker school is latest on the list of those adopting the Palmer method of penmanship.

Ex-President Taft believes in strict obedience to the law because it is the law; in respect to authority because it is the authority; in doing away with funds in education and in making children work for what they learn. The sugar-coated education is of little or no value.

When your regular potato vacation is over, your children should be in school at once and be there every day. Prolonged family vacations hurt your country and hurt your school.

School buildings with ideal light have windows at one side only to the north and left of the pupils. Eye specialists will tell you that it pays.

Rock Elm is working faithfully for a "Standard School" plate. Many schools have more in their favor to begin with, but it looks as if Rock Elm were going to be a leader. They have moved their schoolhouse to a splendid new location, have two acres of ground newly ploughed and graded by volunteers from the district, the best basement in the county, and a spirit that works and dares. Improvements of the near future are new windows to the north, a new furnace and a ventilating system.

Four reading circle classes are being organized. The Charlevoix class meets Saturday the 20th under the leadership of Miss Himes. Every teacher welcome.

The commissioner is making final corrections on directors' reports as required by the state department. If your report has been returned from Lansing you will receive word to that effect and can make arrangements for correcting the same this month: First Saturday in Boyne Falls at Hotel Marsh, second Saturday at the central school in Boyne City, third Saturday, 10-12 a.m., at the central school in Charlevoix.

Many inquiries are coming in as to just how the state inspector knows when a schoolhouse and its equipment may be endorsed by the state. The score cards and possible points to be gained will be printed in this column next week.

SONG OF THE SHREW.

It is Pitched So High That Only Sharp Ears Can Hear It.

The high pitched squeaking or whistling of the shrew is a curious sound and frequently acquires quite a song-like character. More often, however, the voice of the shrew is raised to anger, for it is a pugacious little animal, and the males have fierce combats in the spring of the year. It is a curious fact that many people are unable to hear the shrew's squeaking, not that the sound is not loud enough, but because it is so highly pitched that only sharp ears can record the vibrations.

Though often spoken of as a mouse, the shrew is of an entirely different species, being insectivorous and having sharp teeth on each side of the mouth instead of front teeth, suitable for gnawing, such as are possessed by mice and other rodents.

Though it exists in very great numbers and may very frequently be observed, much remains to be discovered regarding the life of this little creature, an Italian species of which is one of the smallest known mammals. It is still a mystery why so many dead shrews should be found about the roadsides and pathways. They are fearless little animals, and even when disturbed in their spring journeys from one place to another they do not allow themselves to be put out of their course by a trifle.

SIX MEALS A DAY.

This Husky Old Laborer Had a Fairly Healthy Appetite.

Undoubtedly it is better as a general rule to take food sparingly than to eat to repletion, and there are some people who even advocate living on one meal a day and who practice what they preach. But there was no "one meal a day" nonsense about the aged Sussex laborer whom E. V. Lucas met. Thus he described his daily routine and common task:

"Out in the morning at 4 o'clock, mouthful of bread and cheese and pint of ale; then off to the harvest field, ridding and mowing (trekking and mowing) till 8; then morning breakfast and small beer—a piece of fat pork as thick as your hat is wide; then work till 10 o'clock; then a mouthful of bread and cheese and a pint of strong beer (forenoon)—'farmer's lunch,' we call it; work till 12; then at dinner in the farmhouse, sometimes a leg of mutton, sometimes a piece of ham and plum pudding; then work till 5; then a lunch and a quart of ale (noon)—'house beer,' we call it; then work till sunset; then home and have supper and a pint of ale."—London Chronicle.

INVENTS NEW CORK MACHINE

Product Can Now Be Made at the Rate of 1,000 Per Hour.

New Machine Rounds Ends, Bore Holes and Turns Out Finished Product.

The fact that Charlevoix harbors within her midst a genius, an inventor of several well-known machines, and a master mechanic, is unknown to many of our citizens. His latest invention is a machine for making fish net corks—one that will make over ten times the number of corks made under the present method.

A representative of the Courier was extended an invitation by A. L. Hart, the man we refer to, on Friday of last week to visit his workshop and see the machine in operation. He explained the workings of the various machines employed in making the corks.

First, the timber is cut into strips of the size the corks are to be made. These strips are then fed into a machine that rounds them at the rate of fifty feet per minute. This machine was designed by Mr. Hart especially for the work. After the timber is rounded it is cut into lengths used for the corks and fed into the recently constructed machine.

This machine rounds the ends, bores the holes, and turns out a finished cork at the rate of 1000 per hour. It can be adjusted to make four sizes of corks. Heretofore the greatest difficulty has been in getting a clear hole through the cork, but the machine does this perfectly. It works a right and left hand repeating drill and is constructed in such a manner that the knives can be changed in less than a minute, or, rather, in one turn of the machine. The knives are especially made, as well as the drills.

The new machine can soon be seen in operation at the garage on Mason St. Mr. Hart also has a mill on Petoskey Road near the Ferguson farm, where the raw product is manufactured into cork-making material.

Other inventions were shown, one of which was the first machine invented for making music rolls for piano players. Mr. Hart also perfected the working of the well-known Corliss engines and received several medals at the World's Fair in Chicago and other large cities. His workshop is full of interesting designs and causes no end of wonderment to a person unaccustomed to this line of work.

DEATH CLAIMS EARLY SETTLER

John Henry O'Neill Stricken By Heart Failure While at Work.

Settled in County in 1866 and Homesteaded Farm Upon Which He Died.

Death came suddenly at the close of Saturday afternoon to John Henry O'Neill of Phelps, one of the pioneer residents of Charlevoix county. Mr. O'Neill had been in exceptionally good health up to about five o'clock on the day of his death. He had spent the afternoon in the beet field and suddenly complained of being ill. He reached his home with the aid of some of his helpers, and continued to grow worse until death claimed him at 6:30.

John Henry O'Neill was born in Louisa county, Galway, Ireland, October 6, 1838. He came to America with his parents at the age of six months. Later they returned to the old home. He came to this country the second time, again returning, but at the age of 28 years located at Detroit. During the civil war he was in the employ of the government in Kentucky.

In 1866 he came to Charlevoix county and homesteaded the farm upon which he died. Mr. O'Neill suffered all the privation of early pioneer life when this county was but a wilderness. He cleared up the land surrounding his home and with his good wife reared a family of five children, four of whom survive him: Mrs. George McNally, Agnes, Richard and Hugh, besides the aged mother and wife.

Deceased took a prominent part in the affairs of Marion township. He served as supervisor for ten years, besides holding the offices of clerk, treasurer and justice of the peace.

Funeral services were held from St. Mary's church Wednesday, at 10:00 o'clock a. m., and was largely attended by the numerous friends and acquaintances of the deceased.

NOVEMBER TWENTY-FIVE

To Be Observed Throughout the Entire Country as Potato Day.

A novel plan is being worked out for observing November 25th as national potato day. Any group of families, any organization of old and young of either sex, any grange, lodge, club, society, church, can adapt these ideas to its own condition.

The affair may be held in a town or city as a big thing to attract crowds and make a profit for the organization or conducting in a smaller way for the village or neighborhood.

It is planned to have exhibit plates of the different varieties of potatoes, each correctly labeled; reports of their yield; implements used and care taken; fertilizers, etc., used; methods of harvesting, spraying, marketing, etc., and names of and addresses of dealers and commission merchants who handle the product and who are on the square.

Different methods of cooking and serving the tubers will also be demonstrated, and in many localities the day will end with a big banquet and program.

WINNERS IN CORN CONTEST MAKE STATEMENT OF EXPENSE

Affair Conducted in Connection With County Fair—Successfully Terminated—B. J. Holcomb and H. L. Barnum Were Judges—Observations on Corn Growing.

Though universally believed that the unfavorable season would result in complete failure of the "Corn Contest" inaugurated by the State Bank of East Jordan in connection with the county fair, yet this interesting feature has just successfully terminated.

Owing to the fact that only one of the twenty-eight registered prospective exhibitors, John A. Cooper, of Evelyn township, entered an exhibit at the fair, and that the corn was too immature at that time to be properly scored, Mr. Cooper was paid $5.00 of the purse offered. The "contest" was continued until November first, and all registered contestants notified with the result that eleven exhibitors participated in the finals.

B. J. Holcomb, agricultural instructor at the Central School of East Jordan, and H. L. Barnum, manager of the Breezy Point Farm, at Ironton, were secured as judges, whose five hours of careful comparison resulted in the following verdict:

Stroebel Brothers, first premium, $20.00.
August Lew, second premium, $15.00.
Charles Cooper, third premium $10.00.
The ratings given were 73, 69, and 67 per cent respectively. A brief statement from each winner, also some notes by Mr. Barnum, follow:

Stroebel Brothers submit the following statement:
Plowing, per acre, $ 2.00
Double discing twice 2.00
Harrowing 1.00
Marking 40
Planting 40
Cultivating 4 times 2.80
Cutting 1.75
$10.35

Husking per bushel 5 cents; sorting and storing 3 cents; amount planted 13 3/4 acres; average yield per acre 60 bushels. Team labor estimated at rate of $4.00 per day, other labor at $2.00.

August Lew's statement:
My corn was planted on 1-2 acre of heavy black loam, every inch of which was first thoroughly grubbed, except four of five large stumps. Plowed May 27, harrowed on the 28th, and planted corn on the 29th, using about 20 pounds of commercial fertilizer. Corn was planted one to two kernels in a hill, two feet eight inches each way, with a tablespoon full of fertilizer to each hill. Cultivated three times with a single horse cultivator and hoed once. Would estimate cost as follows:

Grubbing 7.00
Plowing 2.50
Cultivating 1.50
Fertilizer .25
$11.25

Yield 45 large crates.

Charles Cooper's statement:
I grew one half acre. Plowed May 1st, planted 100 per cent tested seed May 10. Cultivated seven times. Used fertilizer. After frost September 26th, cut it. Husked 31 bushels October 28.

The winning exhibits are the lobby of the State Bank of East Jordan. Some observations on the corn contest by H. L. Barnum of Ironton: The corn contest which was conducted by the State Bank of East Jordan and the county fair association was closed November 1, and the prizes have been awarded. It is to be hoped, however, that none of the contestants grew corn this year with only the prizes in mind, although they were generous enough to be ample inducements to excel. A corn contest, or any other contest along the same line, should be entered into

Auction Sales.

Hardly a week has passed this fall that the Courier has missed publishing from one to three auction sales. People have long recognized the fact that it is the only medium of advertising a sale, and also that it is the only paper published in this section whose subscription list thoroughly covers the field. This week's issue contains two, as follows:

Tuesday, November 23: On this date the sale of Lee Sneathen will take place at his farm, known as the Cook farm, six and one-half miles east of Charlevoix, near the Maple Grove grange hall, commencing at 10 o'clock, a. m. W. E. Byers, auctioneer; F. A. Butler, clerk.

Wednesday, November 24: Will M. Williams will sell all farm implements, stock, etc., on what is known as the Reuben Geer farm, four miles southeast of the Belvedere Hotel, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. Jerome Cole, auctioneer; Robert Gregory, clerk.

by each one with bigger and higher aims than the money prize, else the contest is conducted in vain and fails in its highest purpose.

It is my intention to show what I believe ought to be the aim and purpose of corn growers in a corn contest and to point out some facts which I observed and which may be useful in widening the scope and increasing the success of next year's contest. The first aim of a corn contest is plainly to induce the growing of more and better corn. Such an end, however, will only be attained through the use of better seed and better culture methods. What constitutes better seed and better culture are questions the young corn growers should surely investigate. The fact that some of the corn was fully mature shows that a few corn growers, at least, have hit upon an early maturing strain of yellow dent corn and by proper culture have been able to secure sound corn in spite of a most unfavorable season.

It would be very instructive and interesting if the winners in this contest should give the corn growers of the section a complete summary of their methods through the columns of the various county papers. In fact, it should be one of the requirements to be met by contestants that the winners give the rest the benefit of their experience. Another striking fact was the freedom from crossing shown by several of the entries, indicating the use of pure seed. The use of pure seed from sources outside of this section is to be commended, however, only when the seed is from early maturing stock and adapted to this latitude. One entry, especially, which showed the effect of careful selection and breeding, was too immature to merit consideration in a contest with mature corn. Without forgetting the unfavorable season, we must not overlook the fact that a pronounced lack of maturity, even where good breeding and selection are evident, shows poor adaptation to this section, and entries of such corn cannot hope to compete with ripened, the possibly less perfect, corn. In view of the facts just stated, my suggestion would be that more seed be carefully selected from corn which has proven its adaptability, although I would not discourage the trying out of other varieties, as before. In this connection it may be well to add that long ears with big cobs require a longer growing season than shorter and smaller eared varieties.

It would take too long to go into all the details of selecting corn for a contest. It is enough to say that some of the entries showed that the exhibitors had very poor judgment in the matter of selection. This is true in every corn contest, however, and I mention it only to add weight to the contention that more instruction along this line is needed. If the contest can set a standard of perfection, and at the same time uncover just such cases of poor judgment as I have in mind, it has done much toward the end desired.

In closing let me suggest for the consideration of the young corn grower of the county, a school of corn judging, this to consist of a day's session in some convenient school house or hall where the work of actual judging, grading and selection of corn can be carried on. If such a venture meets the approval of those interested, I should be glad to hear from them, and it is likely that Professor V. M. Shoemaker, or some other corn authority from the Agricultural College, could be secured to conduct the work.

The Lecture Committee has a treat in store for the people of Charlevoix, in the next number of the Lecture course November 23. Henry M. Rose in his lecture, "The City Beautiful," has made a great hit in Michigan, and in the central states. It is indeed a most compressive visit to our national capitol, one from which those who have never seen Washington will glean much knowledge. For those who have visited our national capitol, it will have all the joys of returning to a well known and familiar spot. The lecture aside from the pictures awakens a desire to see the home of our national government. It is full of graphic descriptions and touching incidents that center around Washington, the greatest capitol in the world, because it is the capitol of a free people.

Henry M. Rose is a man of great breadth of view, and will have some interesting and instructive opinions to give of the nations trend in this most perilous of times.

FIRE DESTROYS FINE DWELLING

Home of William H. Cook on Nettleton Street a Total Loss.

Charlevoix Hardware Company Had Narrow Escape from Disastrous Blaze Tuesday Morning.

Fire originating presumably in the furnace room destroyed the fine residence owned by Wm. H. Cook, 404 Nettleton street, last Friday morning between the hours of two and three o'clock.

Mr. Cook, who had moved from his summer residence to the burned structure but a few days previous, was awakened by the crackling of the flames and found the entire house a mass of fire. He was nearly suffocated by the smoke before he managed to get out of the house, not having time even to dress himself.

The fire department was soon on the ground, but the fire had gained such a headway that little could be done other than to protect the surrounding property. Sparks from the burning building set fire to the house owned by Jas. McGeagh on Burns street, but were gotten under control before much damage was done.

Mr. Cook placed a value of $5,000 on the house and $1,500 on its contents, which was a total loss. Insurance to the amount of $4,000 on the house and $1,000 on the contents was carried, making a total loss of $1,500.

Shortly after midnight Tuesday morning fire was discovered in the store building, occupied by the Charlevoix Hardware Company. The fire started near the east end of the counter on the south side of the store and had it not been discovered before much headway had been gained would undoubtedly have destroyed the entire building and contents. Several men with Pyrene extinguishers had the fire under control before the arrival of the department, which with the aid of the chemical soon had the blaze out.

The cause of the fire remains a mystery, the only clue being that it might have been started from an cigar stub thrown under the counter. The loss will amount to about $200, fully covered by insurance.

A fire insurance policy will protect you at all times against severe financial loss. Are you insured? If not, see Myrtle Young & Son at once. Adv. 4611

Freak Potato.

Loren Hamlin of Hayes township brought a potato to this office last week that for size and construction places it in the freak class. The potato weighs two pounds and nine ounces. It grew in four distinct parts, the main part weighing about a pound and a half. From this grew three distinct potatoes, weighing less than a half pound each, all connected with the larger part of the tuber. It had thoroughly ripened and was of the white stock variety. Who is next with something worthy of mention?

Year's Crops Fall Behind Ten Year Average

Yield Per Acre Throughout State Very Discouraging to Farmers, Says Secretary of State.

The final estimated yield of wheat in the state is 19.91, in the southern counties 20.54, in the central counties 18.23, in the northern counties 17.48 and in the Upper Peninsula 21.36 bushels per acre. The estimated total yield for the State is 15,494,517 bushels. The condition of growing wheat as compared with an average per cent is 83 in the state, 80 in the southern counties, 82 in the central counties, 91 in the northern counties, and 88 in the Upper Peninsula.

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in October at 78 flouring mills is 187,701 and at 79 elevators and to grain dealers 217,452 or a total 405,153 bushels. Of this amount 271,859 bushels were marketed in the southern four tiers of counties, 115,673 in the central counties and 17,721 in the northern counties and Upper Peninsula.

The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the three months August-October is 3,000,000. Forty mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in October. Corn. The estimated average yield per acre of corn, in bushels is 26.32 in the state, 28.29 in the southern counties, 22.47 in the central counties, 15.89 in the northern counties and 11.68 in the Upper Peninsula.

Clover seed—The per cent. of acreage of clover seed harvested as compared with average years is 64 in the state, 56 in the southern counties, 71 in the central counties, 83 in the northern counties and 100 in the Upper Peninsula. The average yield per acre in bushels is 1.41 in the State, 1.18 in the southern counties, 1.60 in the central counties, 2.06 in the northern counties and 3.17 in the Upper Peninsula.

Beans—The final estimated average yield per acre, in bushels, is 8.66 in the State, 8.61 in the southern counties, 8.79 in the central counties, 8.15 in the northern counties and 8.12 in the Upper Peninsula.

Potatoes—The estimated average yield per acre, in bushels is 54.11 in the State, 52.01 in the southern counties, 57.69 in the central counties, 53.42 in the northern counties and 60.88 in the Upper Peninsula.

The yield of corn is 19 per cent., potatoes 40 per cent. and beans 32 per cent. less than the 10 years' average, from 1905 to 1914 inclusive, and the quality the poorest during this period. Corn did not ripen; potatoes rotted badly and beans were seriously affected by anthracnose and excessive moisture.

The FORESTERS DAUGHTER

A ROMANCE OF THE BEAR TOOTH RANGE
By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1914, by Hamlin Garland

SYNOPSIS

Wayland Norcross, an eastern youth seeking health in Colorado, meets Berrie McFarlane, called Berrie, typical ranch girl, daughter of the superintending ranger of Bear Tooth forest.

Berrie is greeted by her lover, Cliff Belden, a cowboy, supposed to be interested in a saloon at Meeker's Mill, where Norcross is bound. Berrie guides Norcross to his destination.

A shower intercepts them and the girl gives the youth her raincoat. There is a rough descent at Meeker's, and Norcross chooses Landon, the ranger, as his companion. Landon loves Berrie.

Cliff notices Berrie's interest in the tenderfoot and warns him away. He also takes his betrothed to task. She resents this and breaks their engagement.

Norcross, the ranger at Bear Tooth, gives Wayland points on forestry. Berrie's father offers him a place in the service. Berrie decides to go with them over the trail.

They climb the high, rough trail and only make camp when Wayland is on the point of collapse. Night in the open charms Wayland.

Wayland blunders repeatedly. The supervisor goes after the horses which have wandered off. He is detained. Norcross arranges to sleep outside and Berrie in a tent.

Wayland being ill, Berrie insists that he sleep in the tent. The supervisor doesn't return. They break camp. Wayland is used up on the trail.

They reach the empty cabin of Tony, a ranger. Next day Mr. Moore, a lumberman, his daughter Slona and a notorious gossip, Mrs. Belden, pass. Norcross admits he is the son of a wealthy lumberman.

The supervisor returns and realizes the delicate situation in which his daughter is placed. Berrie, jealous of the Moore girl, decides to go home.

After breakfast Berrie and Wayland start down the trail, and about 2 o'clock make camp and get dinner.

Cliff hunts Norcross and knocks his rival senseless. Berrie thinks him dead. Seeing life returning she stings herself on Wayland, covering his face with kisses. Cliff leaves.

Nash later comes upon them, helps arrange the camp and stays until morning. Again on the trail Wayland tells Berrie her love should be for Landon and not himself.

CHAPTER XIII.
Berrie's Vigil.

AS Wayland's mind cleared he became curious to know precisely what had taken place, but he did not feel free to ask her. "She will tell me if she wishes me to know." That she had relinquished Belden and sent him on his way was evident, although he had not been able to hear what she had said to him at the last. What lay between the enemy's intrusion and the old he left in making the camp could only be surmised. "I wonder if she used her pistol?" Wayland asked himself. "Something like death must have stared him in the face."

That she loved him with the complete passion of her powerful and simple nature he knew, for her voice had reached through the haze of his semi-consciousness with thrilling power. The touch of her lips to his, the close clasp of her strong arms were of ever greater convincing quality. And yet he wished the revelation had come in some other way. His pride was abraded. His neighborhood seemed somehow reversed of the ordinary relations between hero and heroine, and he saw no way of re-establishing the normal attitude of the male.

Entirely unaware of what was passing in the mind of her patient Berrie went about her duties with a cheerfulness which astonished the sufferer in the tent. She seemed about to hum a song as she set the skillet on the fire, but a moment later she called him, in a tone of irritation, "Here comes Nash!"

"I'm glad of that," answered Wayland, although he perceived something of her displeasure.

Nash, on his way to join the supervisor, raised a friendly greeting as he saw the girl and drew rein. "I expected to meet you farther down the trail," he said. "Any phoned that you had started. Where did you leave the supervisor?"

"Over at the station waiting for you. Where's your outfit?"

"Camped down the trail a mile or so. I thought I'd better push through tonight. What about Norcross? Isn't he with you?"

She hesitated an instant. "He's in the tent. He fell and struck his head on a rock, and I had to go into camp here."

Nash was deeply concerned. "Is that so? Well, that's bad luck. Is he badly hurt?"

"Well, he had a terrible fall. But he's easier now. I think he's asleep."

"May I look in on him?"

"I don't think you'd better take the time. It's a long, hard ride from here to the station. It will be deep night, before you can make it."

"Don't you think the supervisor would want me to camp here tonight and do what I could for you? If Norcross is badly injured you will need me."

She liked Nash, and she knew he was right, and yet she was reluctant to give up the pleasure of her lone vigil. "He's not in any danger, and we'll be able to ride on in the morning."

Nash, thinking of her as Clifford Belden's promised wife, had no suspicion of her feeling toward Norcross. Therefore he gently urged that to go on was quite out of order. "I can't think of leaving you here alone—certainly not till I see Norcross and find out how badly he is hurt."

She yielded. "I reckon you're right," she said. "I'll go see if he is awake."

He followed her to the door of the tent, apprehending something new and inexplicable in her attitude. In the music of her voice as she spoke to the sick man was the love note of the minute. "You may come in," she called back, and Nash, stooping, entered the small tent.

"Hello, old man! What you been doing with yourself? Hitting the high spots?"

Norcross smiled feebly. "No, the hill flew up and bumped me."

"How did it all happen?"

"I don't exactly know. It all came of a sudden. I had no share in it. I didn't go for to do it."

"Whether you did or not, you seem to have made a good job of it."

Nash examined the wounded man carefully, and his skill and strength in handling Norcross pleased Berrie, though she was jealous of the warm friendship which seemed to exist between the men.

She had always liked Nash, but she resented him now, especially as he insisted on taking charge of the case, but she gave way finally and went back to her pots and pans with penitent contentment.

A little later, when Nash came out to make report, she was not very gracious in her manner. "He's pretty badly hurt," he said. "There's an ugly gash in his scalp, and the shock has produced a good deal of pain and confusion in his head, but he's going to all right in a day or two. For a man seeking rest and recuperation he certainly has had a rough run of weather."

Through a serious-minded, honorable forester, determined to keep sterility in mind that he was in the presence of the daughter of his chief, and that she was engaged to marry another, Nash was, after all, a man, and the witchery of the hour, the charm of the girl's graceful figure, asserted their power over him. His eyes grew tender, and his voice eloquent in spite of himself. His words he could guard, but it was hard to keep from his speech the song of the lover. The thought that he was to camp in her company, to help her about the fire, to see her from moment to moment, with full liberty to speak to her, to meet her glance, pleased him. It was the most romantic and moving episode in his life, and though of a rather dry and analytic temperament he had a sense of poetry.

The night, black, oppressive and silent, brought a closer bond of mutual help and understanding between them.

She grew firmer and asked him about his work and especially about his ambitions and plans for the future. They discussed the forest and its enemies, and he wondered at her freedom in speaking of the mill and saloon. He said: "Of course you know that Alex Belden is a partner in that business, and I'm old—of course I don't know this—that Clifford Belden is also interested."

She offered no defense of young Belden, and this unconcern puzzled him. He had expected indignation, protest, but she merely replied, "I don't care who owns it. It should be rooted out. I rate that kind of thing. It's just another way of adding those poor tax-payers."

"Clifford should get out of it. Can't you persuade him to do so?"

"I don't think I can."

"His relationship to you?"

"He is not related to me."

Her tone amazed him. "You know what I mean."

"Of course I do, but you're mistaken. We're not related that way any longer."

This silenced him for a few moments, then he said: "I'm rather glad of that. He isn't anything like the man you thought he was—I couldn't say these things before—but he is as greedy as Alex, only not so open about it."

All this comment, which moved the forester so deeply to utter, seemed not to interest Berrie. She sat staring at the fire with the calm brow of an Indian. Clifford Belden had passed out of her life as completely as he had vanished out of the landscape. She felt an immense relief at being rid of him and resented his being brought back even as a subject of conversation.

Wayland, listening, fancied he understood her desire and said nothing that might arouse Nash's curiosity.

Nash, on his part, knowing that she had broken with Belden, began to nuderstand the tenderness, the anxious care of her face and voice, as she bent above young Norcross. As the night deepened and the cold air stung, he asked, "Have you plenty of blankets for a bed?"

"Oh, yes," she answered, "but I don't intend to sleep."

"Oh, you must," he declared. "Go to bed. I will keep the fire going."

At last she consented. "I will make my bed right here at the mouth of the tent close to the fire," she said, "and you can call me if you need me."

"Why not put your bed in the tent? It's going to be cold up here."

"I am all right outside," she protested.

"Put your bed inside, Miss Berrie. We can't let conventions count above timber line. I shall rest better if I know you are properly sheltered."

And so it happened that for the third time she shared the same roof with her lover. But the nurse was uppermost in her mind.

Nash was the first to arise in the dusk of dawn, and Berrie, awakened by the crackle of his fire, soon joined him.

"If you'll round up our horses, Mr. Nash, I'll rustle breakfast and we'll get going," she said.

Nash, enthralled, lingered while she twisted her hair into place, then went out to bring in the ponies.

Wayland came out a little uncertainly, but looking very well. "I think I shall discourage my friends from coming to this region for their health," he said ruefully. "If I were a novelist now all this would be grist for my mill."

Beneath his joking he was profound in thought. He had hoped by this time to be as shrewy, as alert as Nash. Instead of which here he sat, shivering over the fire like a sick girl, his head swollen, his blood sluggish, but this discouragement only increased Berrie's tenderness—a tenderness which melted all his reserve.

"I'm not worth all your care," he said to her, with poignant glance.

The sun rose clear and warm, and the fire, the coffee, put new courage into him as well as into the others, and while the morning was yet early and the forest chill and damp with rain, the forester brought up the horses and started packing the outfit.

In this Berrie again took part, doing her half of the work quite as dextrously as Nash himself. Indeed, the forester was noticeably confused and not quite up to his usual level of adroitness.

At last both packs were on, and as they stood together for a moment Nash said: "This has been a great experience—old I shall remember as long as I live."

She stirred uneasily under his frank admiration. "I'm mighty obliged to you," she replied, as heartily as she could remember.

"Don't thank me, I'm indebted to you. There is so little in my life of such companionship as you and Norcross give me."

He helped Norcross mount his horse, and as he put the lead rope into Berrie's hand he said, with much feeling: "Good luck to you. I shall remember this night all the rest of my life, Miss Berrie."

"I hate to be going to the rear," called Wayland, whose bare, bandaged head made him look like a wounded

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

"What a mystery it all is! You turn from a splendid fellow like Landon to a 'skate' like me. Landon worships you—you know that—don't you?"

"I know—he!" she ended, vaguely distressed.

"Did he ask you to marry him?"

"Yes."

"Why didn't you? He's just the mate for you. He's a man of high character and education. She made no answer to this, and he went on: "Dear girl, I'm not worth your care—truly, I'm not. I resented your engagement to Belden, for he was a brute, but Landon is different. He thinks the world of you. He'll go high in the service. I've never done any thing in the world—I never shall. It will be better for you if I go—tomorrow."

She took his hand and pressed it to her cheek, then, putting her arm about his neck, drew him to her bosom and kissed him passionately. "You break my heart when you talk like that," she protested, with tears. "You mustn't say such gloomy things—I won't let you give up. You shall come right home with me, and I will nurse you till you are well. It wasn't my fault."

"I will not have it go that way," he said. "I've brought you only care and unhappiness thus far. I'm an alien—my ways are not your ways."

"I can change," she answered. "I hate my ways, and I like yours."

As they argued she felt no shame, and she voiced no resentment. She knew his mood. She understood his doubt, his depression. She pleaded as a man might have done, ready to prove her love, eager to restore his self respect, while he remained both bitter and sadly contemptuous.

A cow hand riding up the trail greeted Berrie respectfully, but a cynical smile broke out on his lips as he passed on. Another witness; another gossip.

She did not care. She had no further concern of the valley's comment. Her life's happiness hung on the drooping eyelashes of this wounded boy, and to win him back to cheerful acceptance of life was her only concern.

"I've never had any motives," he confessed. "I've always done what pleased me at the moment—or because it was easier to do as others were doing. I went to college that way. Truth is, I never had any surplus vitality, and my father never demanded anything of me. I haven't any motives now. A few days ago I was interested in forestry. At this time it all seems futile. What's the use of my trying to live?"

CHAPTER XIV.

The Gossips Awake.

BERIE was frightened for Wayland, and as she thought of the long ride still before them she wrung her hands. "Oh, what shall I do? What shall I do?" she moaned.

Instantly smitten into shame, into humble mood, he said: "Don't worry about me. Please don't. I can ride. I'm feeling better. You must not weaken. Please forgive my selfish complaints. I'm done! You'll never hear it again. Come! Let us go on. I can ride."

"If we can reach Miller's ranch—" "I can ride to your ranch," he declared, and rose with such new found resolution that she stared at him in wonder.

He was able to smile. "I've had my little crying spell. I've relieved my heart of its load. I didn't mean to agonize you. It was only a slump." He put his hand to his head. "I must be a comical figure."

His sudden reversal to cheer was a little alarming to her, but at length she perceived that he had in truth mastered his depression, and, bringing up the horses, she saddled them and helped him to mount. "If you get tired or feel worse tell me, and we'll go into camp," she urged as they were about to start.

"You keep going till I give the sign," he replied, and his voice was so firm and clear that her own sunny smile came back. "I don't know what to make of you," she said. "I reckon you must be a poet."

It was dark when they reached the village, but Wayland declared his ability to go on, although his wounded head was throbbing with fever and he was clinging to the pommel of his saddle; so Berrie rode on.

Mrs. McFarlane, hearing the horses on the bridge, was at the door and received her daughter with wondering question, while the stable hands, quick to detect an injured man, hurried to lift Norcross down from his saddle.

"What's the matter?" repeated Mrs. McFarlane.

"He fell and struck his head on a stone," Berrie hastily explained. "Take the horses, boys! Mother and I will look out for Mr. Norcross."

The men obeyed her and fell back, but they were consumed with curiosity, and their glances irritated the girl. "Slip the packs at once," she insisted. With instant sympathy her mother came to her aid in supporting the wounded, weary youth indoors, and as he stretched out on the couch in the sitting room he remarked with a faint, ironic smile, "This beats any bed of balsam boughs."

"Where's your father?" asked Mrs. McFarlane of her daughter. "He's over on the farm. I've a powerful lot to tell you, mother, but not now; we must look after Wayland. He's nearly done up, and so am I."

Mrs. McFarlane winced a little at her daughter's use of Norcross' first name, but she said nothing further at the moment, although she watched Berrie closely while she took off Wayland's shoes and stockings and rubbed his icy feet. "Get him something hot as quick as you can," she commanded, and Mrs. McFarlane obeyed without a word.

Gradually the tremor passed out of his limbs and a delicious sense of warmth, of safety, stole over him, and he closed his eyes in the comfort of her presence and care. "Rigorous business this life of the pioneer," he said with mocking infection. "I think I prefer a place in the lumber trust."

"Don't talk," she said. Then, with a rush of tender remorse, "Why didn't you tell me to stop? I didn't realize that you were so tired. We could have stopped at the Springs."

"I didn't know how tired I was till I got here. Gee," he said joyfully, "that doorknob at the back of my head is red-hot. You're good to me," he added humbly.

She hated to have him resume that tone of self depreciation, and, kneeling to him, she kissed his cheek and laid her head beside his. "You're splendid," she insisted. "Nobody could be braver, but you should have told me you were exhausted. You fooled me with your cheerful answers."

He accepted her loving praise, her chafing arms, as a part of the rescue from the darkness and pain of the long ride, careless of what it might bring to him in the future. He ate his toast and drank his coffee and permitted the woman to lead him to his room, and then he lay alone he crept into his bed and fell instantly asleep.

Berrie and her mother went back to the sitting room, and Mrs. McFarlane closed the door behind them. "Now tell me all about it," she said in the tone of one not to be denied.

The story went along very smoothly till the girl came to the second again in camp beside the lake. There her voice faltered, and the reflective look in the mother's eyes deepened as she learned that her daughter had shared her tent with the young man. "It was the only thing to do, mother," Berrie bravely said. "It was cold and wet outside, and you know he isn't very strong, and his teeth were chattering he was so chilled. I know it sounds strange down here, but up there in the woods in the storm what I did seemed right and natural. You know what I mean, don't you?"

"You're splendid," she insisted. "Nobody could be braver."

"Yes, I understand. I don't blame you—only—if others should hear of it."

"But they won't. No one knows of our being alone there except Tony and father."

"Are you sure? Doesn't Mrs. Belden know?"

"I don't think so—not yet."

Mrs. McFarlane's nervousness grew.

"I wish you hadn't gone on this trip. If the Beldens find out you were alone with Mr. Norcross they'll make much of it. It will give them a chance at your father." Her mind turned upon another point. "When did Mr. Norcross get his fall?"

"On the way back," Here Berrie hesitated again. "I don't like to tell you, mother, but he didn't fall; Cliff jumped him and tried to kill him."

The mother doubted her ears. "Cliff did? How did he happen to meet you?"

Berrie was quick to answer. "I don't know how he found out we were on the trail. I suppose the old lady planned him. Anyway, while we were camped for noon yesterday—her face flamed again at thought of that gentle, beautiful moment when they were eating on the grass—while we were at our lunch he came tearing down the hill on that big bay horse of his and took a flying jump at Wayland. As Wayland went down he struck his head on a stone. I thought he was dead, and I was paralyzed for a second. Then I drew at Cliff and just about choked the life out of him. I'd have ended him right there if he hadn't let go."

Mrs. McFarlane, looking upon her daughter in amazement, saw on her face the shadow of the deadly rage which had burned in her heart as she clinched young Belden's throat. "What then? What happened then?"

"He let go, you bet." Her smile came back.

"When did this take place?" "Yesterday about 2. Of course Wayland couldn't ride, he was so dizzy and kind of confused, and so I went into camp right there at timber line. Along about sunset Nash came riding up from this side and insisted on staying to help me, so I let him."

Mrs. McFarlane's tense attitude relaxed. "Nash is not the kind that tattles. I'm glad he turned up."

"And this morning I saddled and came down."

"Did Nash go on?"

"Yes. Daddy was waiting for him, so I let him go along."

"It's all and business," granted Mrs. McFarlane, "and I can see you're keeping something back. How did Cliff happen to know just where you were, and what started you back without your father?"

For the first time Berrie showed signs of weakness and distress. "Why, you see, Alice Belden and Mr. Moore were over there to look at some timber, and old Marm Helden and that Moore girl went along. I suppose they went to Cliff, and I presume that Moore girl put him on our trail. Leastwise that's the way I figure it out. That's the worst of the whole business." She admitted this with darkened brow. "Mrs. Belden's tongue is hung in the middle and loose at both ends—and that Moore girl is spiteful mean." She could not keep the contempt out of her voice.

"Oh, I wish you hadn't gone!" exclaimed the worried mother.

"It can't be helped now, and it hasn't done me any real harm. It's all in the day's work anyhow. I've always gone with daddy before, and this trip isn't going to spoil me. The boys all know me, and they will treat me fair."

"Yes, but Mr. Norcross is an outsider, a city man. They will all think evil of him on that account."

"I know. That's what troubles me. No one will know how fine and considerate he was. Mother, I've never known any one like him. He's a poet! I don't care what people say of me if only they will be just to him. They've got to treat him right," she added firmly.

"Did he speak to you—are you engaged?"

Her head drooped. "Not really engaged, mother, but he told me how much he liked me, and—it's all right, mother. I know it is. I'm not true enough for him, but I'm going to try to change my ways so he won't be ashamed of me."

Mrs. McFarlane's face cleared. "He surely is a fine young fellow and can be trusted to do the right thing. Well, we might as well go to bed. We can't settle anything till your father gets home," she said.

Wayland rose next morning free from dizziness and almost free from pain, and when he came out of his room his expression was cheerful. "I feel as if I'd slept a week, and I'm hungry. I don't know why I should be, but I am."

Mrs. McFarlane met him with something very intimate, something almost maternal in her look, but her words were few and as restrained as ever. He divined that she had been talking with Berrie and that a fairly clear understanding of the situation had been reached. That this understanding involved him closely he was aware, but nothing in his manner acknowledged it.

She did not ask any questions, believing that sooner or later the whole story must come out. The fact that Belden and Mrs. Belden knew that Berrie had started back on Thursday with young Norcross made it easier for the villagers to discover that she had not reached the ranch till Saturday. "What could Joe have been thinking of to allow them to go?" she said. "Mr. Nash's presence in the camp must be made known, but then there is Cliff's assault upon Mr. Norcross. And so while the young people chatted the trampled mule waited in fear, knowing that in a day or two the countryside would be abuzz with accusation."

A long day's rest, a second night's sleep, set Wayland on his feet. He came to breakfast quite gay. "Harring the hickory nut on the back of my head," he explained, "I'm feeling fine almost ready for another expedition. I may make a ranger yet."

Berrie, though equally gay, was not so sure of his ability to return to work. "I reckon you'd better go easy till daddy gets back, but if you feel like it we'll ride up to the postoffice this afternoon."

"I want to start right in to learn to throw that hatch, and I'm going to practice with an ax till I can strike twice in the same place. This trip was an eye opener. Great man I'd be in a whirlfall, wouldn't I?"

He was persuaded to remain very quiet for another day, and part of it was spent in conversation with Mrs. McFarlane, whom he liked very much, and an hour or more in writing a long letter wherein he announced to his father his intention of going into the forest service. "I've got to build up a constitution," he said, "and I don't know of a better place to do it in. Besides, I'm beginning to be interested in the scheme. I like the supervisor in living in his house at the present time, and I'm feeling contented and happy, so don't worry about me." He was indeed quite comfortable. He was when he realized that Mrs. McFarlane was taking altogether too much for granted in their relationship. It was delightful to be so watched over, so waited upon, so instructed. "But where is it all leading me?" he continued to ask himself, and still that wall of reserve troubled and saddened Berrie.

On the fourth morning the phone rang, and the sighing voice of Mrs. Belden came over the wire—"I wanted to know if Berrie and her feller got home all right?"

"Yes, they arrived safely." The old woman chuckled. "Last I see of Cliff he was hot on the trail—looked like he expected to take a hand in that expedition. Did he overtake 'em?"

"I don't hear very well. Where are you?"

"I'm at the Scott ranch. We're coming round 'the barn' today."

"Where is the supervisor?"

"He headed across yesterday. Say, Cliff was used as a hornet when he started. I'd like to know what happened."

Mrs. McFarlane hung up the receiver. The old woman's uneasy chuckle was intolerable, but in silencing the phone Mrs. McFarlane was perfectly aware that she was not silencing the gossip; on the contrary, she was certain that the Beldens would leave a trail of poisonous comment from the farm to the town. It was all sweet material for them.

Berrie wanted to know who was speaking, and Mrs. McFarlane replied, "Mrs. Belden wanted to know if you got through all right."

"She said something else, something to hint you up," persisted the girl, who perceived her mother's agitation. "What did she say—something about me—and Cliff?"

The mother did not answer, for Wayland entered the room at the moment, but Berrie knew that intruders were already busy with her affairs. "I don't care anything about old lady Belden," she said later, "but I hate to have that Moore girl telling lies about me."

Little Tommie, at the movies, saw a tribe of Indians painting their faces, and asked mother the significance of this. "Indians, his mother replied, always paint their faces before going on the war-path before scalping, murdering. The next evening as the mother was entertaining sister's 'beau' in the parlor, Tommy rushed down stairs, wide-eyed with fright: "Come on, mother, he cried, let's get out quick! Sister's going on the war-path."

Little Archie was told to put down a sharp knife with which he was playing, but did not do so. When he cut his finger he ran to his mother who said: "There, now don't come to me for sympathy. 'I don't want sympathy,' Archie cried, 'I want a rag.'"

"I want you to write me an obituary on the old lady," said the rural subscriber to the editor. "Sorry to hear of your loss." "Well, I'm not kickin' ag'in Providence." "Oh, of course not. Well, how old was she?" "She never did tell." "Of a retiring disposition, was she?" "No, sir; she was mighty in evidence at all times." "Well, my friend, what on earth am I to say?" "Oh, jes say that she was took away by Providence, an' Providence knows his business."

A determined-looking woman entered a dry goods store and, walking up to a clerk, said: "I want a pair of socks for my husband." "Yes'm," replied the clerk; "what number, please?" The determined-looking shopper glared at him. "I don't know that's it any of your business," she said, "but he is number three."

Suffrage Notes

In Kansas the first time the equal suffrage question was submitted it received only 9100 votes. It was voted on three times before it carried. In New York State at the recent election 500,000 votes were cast for suffrage and a change of less than a tenth in the total vote would have brought victory. Since this is the first time the question has been voted on in New York, the suffragists are naturally elated.

The minority votes for suffrage this year were formidable not only in numbers, but in quality. To a remarkable extent they included the flower of the men eminent for intelligence and public service, from President Wilson and T. A. Edison down.—Woman's Journal.

In Massachusetts the liquor interests fought openly against suffrage. Pink slips were passed around by saloon men labelled: "Good for two drinks if woman suffrage is defeated."

Thirty-two counties in Pennsylvania—including Allegheny, in which Pittsburgh is located—gave a majority for suffrage.

Ex-President Taft, in the Saturday Evening Post, says he recognizes that woman suffrage is likely to come, but thinks it should be delayed until women have become better prepared to exercise it. The Bloomington (Illinois) Pantagraph, a Republican paper and one that strongly opposed equal suffrage until it was adopted in Illinois, two years ago, says in reply to Mr. Taft's objection: "Who is to pass on this question of whether the women are fully or 'better' prepared? If women really desire the ballot, what better preparation to exercise it could there be than actually exercising it? To be sure they might, and doubtless would make mistakes, but they could hardly go further astray than countless male voters at every election and there is no reason to believe that they would not be at least as prompt in profiting by their mistakes."

The brownest, juiciest, tastiest Thanksgiving Turkeys in the land--

Will be those roasted in the ovens of MONARCH Malleable Ranges. An air-tight oven. A perfect fire under perfect control. Every good cook knows these are the essentials to perfect baking.

Most all new ranges do good work, but the trouble is they won't stay new. They don't stay tight so they can't continue to give the same sort of service. With the MONARCH these things keep right year after year. All the seams and joints in the MONARCH Range are riveted. The malleable iron won't break under the blows of the hammer. There is no need to stuff the joints with stove putty as is the case with all ranges where brittle grey iron is used. The wonderful baking qualities of the MONARCH Range are only one of its good points. Here are others you should know about before buying.

Make Your Cooking a Daily Pleasure

Duplex Draft—Helps to keep even heat. Dust Tight Ash Pit—No cloud of dust when you shake the fire down. Complete Asbestos Lining—Not an inch of steel wall left, exposed to damage from corrosion. To understand all about these things is to insist on having a Monarch Range. Come in and give us a chance to show you.

OUR SHRINKING SUN.

Its Diameter Becomes About Four Miles Less Each Century.

There are various theories to account for the enormous store of heat and light in the sun. The theory now generally accepted by physicists is that the continual contraction of the sun in cooling is the chief source of apparent inexhaustible energy. It has been estimated that at the present rate of expenditure of heat the sun's diameter would contract four miles in a century and in a few millions of years it may become as dense as the earth.

The sun is supposed to be composed of much the same materials as the earth, except that they are at a much higher temperature. About forty of the seventy terrestrial elements have been identified by the spectroscopic analysis existing in the vapors around the sun. Astronomers think that they did trace, though of very low substances not at nearly known. Even these may be discovered on the earth some day.

It has been calculated that the heat thrown on a square mile exposed at noon under the equator would melt in an hour 235,411 tons of ice. This amount has to be multiplied fifty million times to arrive at the quantity of heat received by the earth's surface during a single hour. Yet this enormous supply is even less than one two-thousandth millionth part of what the sun pours forth in all directions in space. It seems to reason that this inconceivable outpouring of heat must be accompanied by a gradual though imperceptible diminution in the size of the sun.—Philadelphia Press.

Mild Result.

The courtroom was crowded. A wife was seeking divorce on the grounds of extreme cruelty and brutally abusive treatment.

The husband was on the stand undergoing a grueling cross examination.

The examining attorney said: "You have testified that your wife on one occasion threw cayenne pepper in your face. Now, sir, kindly tell us what you did on that occasion."

The witness hesitated and looked confused. Every one expected that he was about to confess to some shocking act of cruelty. But their hopes were shattered when he finally blurted out:

"I sneezed!"—Everybody.

DRUGS TAKE BIG JUMP IN PRICE

Druggists Are Forced to Add to Present High Cost of Living.

Quinine, Glycerine and Other Household Necessities Are Boosted in Price.

"The active demand for certain drugs such as quinine, aspirin tablets, acids, disinfectants and the like from both exporters and home consumers has resulted in increases in the price of these drugs from one hundred to several hundred per cent," said a local druggist the other day. "It is of course, impossible to say whether prices will continue to go up or will fall, but our trade journals all agree that the demand is greatly exceeding the supply."

Local drug stores are charging about 25 cents a dozen for aspirin tablets as compared with a former price of 20 cents a dozen. The well known and favorite two grain quinine tablets sell for about 15 cents a dozen, rising from 10 cents a dozen. Quinine now sells for $4.00 an ounce. Not long ago it could be bought for 80 cents an ounce. In the past two months glycerine has risen from 40 cents a pint to $1 a pint, and carbolic acid has risen from 5 cents an ounce to 25 cents an ounce.

There has recently been sharp rises in prices of sweet birch, clove and peppermint oils and even cod liver oil and castor oil is considerably more valuable than in former months.

Easy Oysters.

During a discussion on finance in the United States senate one of the speakers traced the history of the various mediums of exchange, their development and changes from the days of barter to the days of gold and silver.

"I call to the attention of the senate," he said in the course of the speech, "that at one time the medium of exchange was oyster shells. Oyster shells were used for money."

"Delightful!" broke in the late Senator Hoar of Massachusetts. "If that system only prevailed now we could order half a dozen oysters on the half shell and pay for them with the shells."

Nothing but the harmony of friend ship soothes our sorrows. Without its sympathy there is no happiness on earth. Mozart.

A CORRECTION

Courier Correspondents Wanted to be Careful Regarding Future News Items.

Charles R. Thomas of Ellsworth, R. F. D. No. 1, took a fall out of the Courier correspondent in a letter written the first of the week on account of a news item appearing under the head of "Miles School District" in last week's issue.

The article in question stated that the stork had left a baby girl at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas "who in future years will be known as Mable Thomas."

Somebody put one over our correspondent in fine shape in this matter. Mr. Thomas states that a baby was born at his home on the 9th of last April, a few days over seven months ago, and that, instead of naming her Mable, she was named Helen.

In view of the circumstances we cannot blame Mr. Thomas for asking for a correction, and deeply regret that such an error occurred. Possibly the Courier correspondent was a little over-zealous in getting the "news" and was careless in regard to truthfulness. We have known of cases where news items were given correspondents with the intent of putting one over on someone in the neighborhood. But remember at all times that it is the intent of the Courier to publish the news as it happens, and when it happens, and not to harm or ruffle the feelings of anyone. Correspondents are requested to use the utmost caution in the items they send to us, as we have no way of ascertaining their truthfulness other than the trust we place in them.

GAME BANQUET

One of the Most Enjoyable Events Held in City—Losers Made Good.

On Thursday evening, November 11th, the annual game supper occurred in the Blue Store Hall. The business men were divided into two sides with Moblo and Ely as captains. Moblo's side, at the end of the hunt, lead in points and, according to agreement, the losers stood to furnish the feed.

The losers were game and put up a swell feed, which developed into a banquet with D. E. Clow as toastmaster. Ely made a grand display as head waiter for the losers.

Although the losers consider themselves splendid shooters—in fact pride themselves on being the best in these parts—some of their members when they found they could not kill rabbits with No. 7 shot used No. 3 buckshot, but to no avail. For instance, one rabbit stood near a host of the losers and allowed the defeated braves to shoot eight times and then hunny thought he would trot along!

Arithmetic by Hand.

We shall never be in danger of forgetting that our ancestors did their sums on their fingers so long as arithmetic retains the word "digits." The modern civilization knows nothing of the elaborate developments of this method. It takes a Wallachian peasant to multiply 8 by 9 on his hands. This is how he does it: The fingers of either hand, beginning with the thumb stand for the numbers from 6 to 10. So the ring finger of one hand and the middle finger of the other are stuck out to represent 8 and 9. Counting the fingers remaining on the side farthest from the thumb, he finds then 1 and 2 respectively, and 1 multiplied by 2 gives him the units of his product—2. Then he counts from the thumb to the stuck out fingers on both hands, finds then 3 and 4, adds these and gets 7 for his tens. Answer 72. All this to avoid knowing the multiplication table beyond 4 times 4.

Napoleon's Temper.

A story is told of a sudden rage into which Napoleon I. fell one day as he was at dinner. He had scarcely taken of a mouthful when apparently some inopportune thought or recollection struck his brain to madness, and receding from the table without rising from his chair his small stature perched on his head, he dashed his foot-dash went the table, crash went the dinner and the emperor sprang up, intending to pounce the room. Quick as a flash his waiter switched a few magic symbols on a bit of paper, and the emperor's check had grown more than double. Napoleon appreciated the dexterity of his attendant and said, "Thank you my dear Dumant," with one of his inimitable smiles. The hurricane had blown over.

Reversible.

"Sung & raw was I ere I saw war & guns" spells the same both backward and forward.

Temperance

THE HOTEL BAR.

"It is time we ceased to insult the American public by insisting that a hotel cannot be run without a bar." These are not the words of a prohibition fanatic but of the proprietor of a fine hotel and were spoken at the annual meeting of the Northwestern Hotel Men's association. The speaker, Mr. Leimbacher of Gardner, N. D., addressed the convention on "Prohibition an Economic Proposition," and his vigorous handling of the subject called forth great applause. "From the manager down to the bell hop," he said, "booze makes more trouble than any other thing in our business. If the cause for eight out of every ten hotel failures were to be carefully analyzed, liquor would be found to be the rock on which the business was shattered. It is an indisputable fact that more managers lose their positions on account of booze than through any lack of real efficiency. The same may be found throughout the crew."

RUSSIA ANSWERS.

"When vodka was on sale the average savings bank deposits in Russia were in the neighborhood of from $18,000,000 a year—a year, not a month. In the thirty-one days of January, 1915, five months after the sale of vodka was prohibited—in one month—the former vodka drinkers put $30,000,000 into the savings banks in the empire. They saved nearly twice as much in one month as they formerly saved in a year," says Samuel G. Blythe in the Saturday Evening Post. The liquor interests of the United States are telling the people that "national prohibition would mean the loss of $250,000,000 to the treasury of our national government," and are asking, "who will make up this revenue?" Russia has shown the way. That nation is demonstrating the soundness of the policy expressed in these words of William E. Gladstone—"Give me a sober people and I will provide the revenue."

PROHIBITION EMPTIES JAIL.

"It has surprised even the strongest advocates of prohibition to see the effect that law has had in preventing crime and misdemeanors in Greenlee county," says the Clifton (Ariz.) Journal.

"For many years the courts of this county have been occupied with a multiplicity of cases, mostly resulting from booze, and the several justice courts have been kept busy sentencing prisoners to jail or fining them. For years the jails have been crowded to capacity and the fines have often run close to $1,000 in a single justice court in one month. But conditions have changed since the first of the year. The jail has been empty at some places a good share of the time; cases have been few and far between, and most of them were slight misdemeanors."

WARN COUNTRY EDITORS!

Falscheeds and misrepresentations by the page, the column, or the paragraph are being sent out to the country press by the publicity department of the Liquor Dealers' association of Cincinnati, with the assurance that all they desire is "a fair representation of their side of the prohibition question," and that the matter sent may be relied upon absolutely. Every white ribboner should feel a personal responsibility in warning the editors in her community of the nature and source of these articles, and offer in their place to furnish some of the excellent material sent out by the publicity bureau of the National W. C. T. U.—The Union Signal.

MISSOURI DRYING UP.

More than half the people of Missouri live in territory absolutely dry. For years more than half the territory in the state has been dry, but the large city population meant that a majority of the people lived in wet territory. As the result, however, of very recent dry victories 50.2 per cent in Missouri's entire population now live in saloonless territory. Between 75 and 80 per cent of the state's territory is dry. Seventy-nine of the 114 counties are dry; nineteen dry with the exception of one town of more than 2,500 population. Sixteen counties and the city of St. Louis are the only entirely wet localities in the state.

STILL ON THE JOB.

"When national constitutional prohibition has been secured won't the Woman's Christian Temperance Union be out of a job?" queried a young woman journalist of Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U. She was assured that "our organization, in common with all temperance forces, would then enter upon its most important task—that of enforcing the prohibitory law and of maintaining through education, agitation and organization the high standard of sentiment necessary for the election of law-enforcing officials."

REVENUE COULD BE SPARED.

The retail liquor dealers in New York will pay into the state treasury this year twenty-two and a half million dollars. Nobody doubts that the state could spare this sum or a greater one for an equivalent of sobriety and moral strength—New York Evening World.

Gymnasium at Roller Rink Will Be Opened December 1.

Necessary Funds to Finance Undertaking Assured—Membership Open to All Citizens.

That Charlevoix will have a gymnasium during the winter was made a certainty Tuesday evening, when final arrangements were made and a lease signed with Ed. Seaman for the use of the skating rink on Belvedere avenue for a period of four months, beginning the first of December. The gymnasium will be under the management and supervision of M. A. Craig, W. A. Ewing, Archie Livingston and Rev. Lloyd C. Vinyard. During the past week the committee have been carrying on a widespread campaign for finances to assure the proposition, and before the lease was drawn up practically all the needed money to launch the undertaking was subscribed. A further circulation of this subscription list will be made this week, so that every enthusiastic and live business man and citizen may have an opportunity to join his name to those who are anxious to continue the gymnasium proposition for another season. If your name is not on the list, the committee wish it known that you will be called upon in the near future, for it is the plan for all to have a part in this work.

The gymnasium will be conducted along practically the same lines as last season, only a bigger effort will be made to have it more of a community affair. Last winter many of the business men made regular visits to the rink and spent several lively hours a week in having good systematic exercise. This year basketball will be on the docket, but it is the plan not to give so much time to this side of the work that it will place a damper on the other activities. Letters are coming in daily seeking dates with the local team, and with the high school schedule this winter's season promises to be a lively one in the favorite winter sport.

As an undertaking the securing of the rink for gymnasium purposes is a laudable achievement. It will afford a place for business men and students alike to go and while enjoying good systematic exercise there will be a source of amusement for the long winter months. On every side the committee have met with encouragement, and enthusiasm, and all they ask is that everyone place their shoulders to the wheel and give the proposition a good big "Charlevoix hoast."

OO XMAS MAILING EARLY

Patrons Asked to Help Avoid Rush During the Holiday Season.

That the slogan "mail early" be added to the annual Christmas advice to "shop early" is the suggestion of post office officials as a means of lessening the burden of the holiday rush at the post offices.

The belief that postmasters could well afford to co-operate with civic bodies and commercial clubs is expressed in a letter to Postmaster T. G. Finucan from Daniel C. Roper, first assistant to the postmaster general at Washington.

"You are expected to make an earnest effort to secure the co-operation of civic organizations and of patrons individually," says the letter in part. "For the information of the bureau you will report on or before January 1, 1916, the results secured by you in line with these suggestions, pointing out the additional co-operation given you by the public, especially during the Christmas period."

PLAYED WITH MATCHES

Little Children of William Thorpe Narrowly Escaped Death by Fire.

Children playing with matches nearly caused the loss of the home of William Thorpe in the west end of the city Monday forenoon.

The fire was discovered on the second floor of the house, but the prompt work of the fire department and neighbors extinguished the blaze before much damage was done. The fire was started by the young children of Mr. Thorpe playing with a box of matches on a bed in an upstairs room of the house. They had lit a number of matches, and in some manner set the bed on fire. The children were rescued before the fire had gained much headway.

Mattresses and bedding were badly damaged by fire and water and a small loss to the house. The house was owned by Robert Withers.

LOOKS LIKE IT IS UP TO STATE

In Matter of Bringing Criminals Back to State of Michigan.

Old Forgotten Statute Says State Must Pay the Expenses of County Officers.

A complete change in paying the expense of bringing criminals to Michigan from other states, on requisitions will be adopted before long if Auditor General Fuller can fix matters with Governor Ferris to change the regular state blanks.

A forgotten statute passed 20 years ago has been found, by which it is incumbent upon the state to pay the expenses of county officers when they go on extradition cases. Nobody can find a single case in which the state has paid any money.

A new blank will be drawn up in which the counties will be charged with the expenses. There is a clause in the law which says that the state shall pay the expenses "unless otherwise arranged for by the governor."

Wm. J. Galbraith, prosecuting attorney of Houghton county, caused the new deal. He recently went with his sheriff to a western state for four men; then wrote asking what percentage of the combined expense the state would pay. The total bill was $600 and Mr. Galbraith was politely informed the state would pay nothing. His second letter contained a reference to the law.

What Auditor General Fuller is afraid of is old claims. As a claim against the state is never outlawed, some counties would have a pretty fair bill to present if they cared to do so.

MEETING OF GREAT INTEREST

W. C. T. U. Raising Fund to Help Toward State-wide Prohibition.

Eighteen New Members Added to Already Large Membership—The Program.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union, which met with Mrs. N. A. Shores on Dixon avenue, November 12th, was a "live wire" from start to finish. Ye scribe, however, failed to get the report of said meeting ready for the Courier for the issue following the meeting, but it was such an interesting meeting that we do not want to pass it by entirely, so will give some of the items of interest.

The amount sent from the union for the state-wide campaign fund was $15.27, as reported.

The union will place in the schools for the use of the pupils a quantity of booklets with temperance facts and sentiments printed on them.

The program was in charge of Miss Himes, topic "Scientific Temperance," and reports of the district convention from the two delegates from the normal class. Miss Ruth Chellis gave a fine report, which was listened to with much interest.

Song by the normal class.
Talk by Rev. L. C. Vinyard: "The W. C. T. U. and State-wide Prohibition—Their Relation to Each Other."

Rev. Charles E. Taggart gave a talk on "The Church and Teachers."

Both of these talks were good.
Rev. Quinton Walker gave a practical talk on the situation we have to-day in our midst, stirring up to better effort.

Superintendent Craig talked on "Scientific Temperance." Certain conditions often lead to intemperance, he said.
Miss Florence Maddaugh, the other normal class delegate to the district convention, gave an exceptionally fine report, full of enthusiasm.

Solo by Mrs. A. L. Coulter, "Hear the Bugles Calling."

About ninety people were served to delicious refreshments.

Three honorary members, 11 associate and five active members were secured at this meeting.

BURGARS AT PETOSKEY

Enter Pere Marquette Station, But Get Little for Their Trouble.

Burglars broke several windows and entered the Pere Marquette passenger station at Petoskey some time after midnight last Thursday morning. They ransacked the ticket office, scattered tickets everywhere, knocked the handle off the safe, went through the cash tills, but failed to get anything but a few pennies and what pennies were in the gum and weighing machines in the building.

The night operator was asleep in his room on the second floor of the building and was awakened by the burglar below but discreetly stayed in his room and let the night prowler complete his work undisturbed.

The following night several stores were entered along the G. R. & I. railroad, but little cash was lost.

NEW LAW MAKES WORK FOR CLERK

Getting Old Cases Ready for Docket a Hard Task.

According to New Ruling All Cases Not Settled Will Appear on Calendar.

Because the last legislature passed an act requiring a new procedure in the handling of cases brought in the circuit court for trial, County Clerk Lewis will have to go over all the records in his office and list all cases, civil and chancery, which have not been settled and place them on the calendar for disposition and record at some future time.

Every case which has been brought into court and in which the docket does not show a settlement will have to be placed on the calendar and the clerk will have to go back to the time when the Charlevoix county court was established, and that is a great many years ago. It means that hundreds of cases will be dug up from their resting place in the archives of the clerk's office, and it also means that there will be a voluminous calendar.

Special.

Next Sunday night the pastor of the Baptist church will speak on "The Roman Catholic Church and the Menace." We believe such papers should not have a place in our homes and you are invited to come and hear an unbiased discussion of Roman Catholic principles compared to Menace arguments. A baptismal service will close our evening's program. Come, you are welcome.
Yours for Our Lord Jesus,
Lloyd C. Vinyard.

MAY RESULT IN LEGAL BATTLE

Council Takes Initial Steps to Terminate Richardi Contract.

Present Contract Deemed Unjust, Unfair and a Burden Upon the City.

After having had the matter under advisement for a number of months, and consulting with various attorneys, the members of the common council took the initial step toward terminating the existing electric lighting contract between the city of Charlevoix and Henry Richardi of Bellaire, Monday night.

The present contract was entered into ten years ago next May with the stipulation that at the end of ten years a readjustment of rates could be made or other changes as might be deemed necessary, but it was construed in such a manner that if the city continued to use current after midnight, May 31, 1916, it would automatically bind them to the contract for another period of 10 years.

During the past nine years and up to the present time the service rendered by the Bellaire end of the deal has been very unsatisfactory. Frequent shut-downs have forced the city to supply electricity from the old plant, which is utterly inadequate to satisfactorily supply the amount needed. Not only has these frequent shut-downs inconvenienced the city, but has worked a hardship on business establishments and hotels depending upon electric current for power and other purposes. In fact, nearly every time there was rain or a heavy wind the current "went wrong" and a howl of wrath and indignation was heard all over the city.

To go into the details of explaining the existing contract would take many columns and would read like a fairy tale. Expressing the opinion of an unbiased person, "it is a one-sided contract and holds the city in a manner in which they have no recourse whatever. They are obliged to take such service as is given them without any way of bettering conditions."

At its regular meeting Monday night the council accepted a proposition submitted them by the Charlevoix Rock Product Company. This proposition binds the city to accept current during no stated length of time, and at a rate less than that which is now being paid under the Richardi contract. Under the present contract the city is paying 5 cent per k. w., with an increase of rate over a minimum amount. In other words, the more current we use, the higher rate we are obliged to pay per k. w.

The proposition made by the Rock Product Company is to furnish electricity at 4 cent per k. w. for 500 k. w. or under. Above 500 k. w. a sliding scale to be charged. In other words, the more you use, the less you pay per k. w., a proposition directly opposite that of the Richardi contract.

A comparison of rates shows that had the city purchased electricity during the past year under a contract similar to that submitted by the Rock Product Co. it would have saved $717.18 on the amount used.

The council proposes to use the minimum amount under the Richardi contract, and buy all over this amount from the Rock Product Company, and in case of shut-down such has happened in the past, use current from this source instead of firing up the old auxiliary plant.

The action of the council will undoubtedly result in involving the city in a legal battle, the outcome of which is at present uncertain. Regardless of this fact, however, they are to be commended for the action taken.

According to Joe Shores, over four thousand bushels of fine potatoes were raised on the Nicholls farm the past season. Corn and buckwheat was hard hit by the early frosts and amounted to little. Regardless of this setback, fifty acres have been stumped this fall and made ready for crops next season. The owners have recently purchased fifty head of Poll-Aberdeen heifers from R. W. "Do Your Christmas Shopping Early"

The above slogan in the hands of an astute business man changed the whole practice of Christmas shopping and stimulated holiday business as nothing else could have done. This man, with the nerve of a Barnum and the judgment of a Wanamaker, grabbed the thought from the public mind and put it into big BLACK TYPE where "He who runs may read"—in the newspaper! He backed a popular conviction with his coin and advertised the universal belief that it would be better for everyone concerned if the inevitable Christmas purchases were made at once while stocks were fresh and new and the choice was wide and ample:

The result not only paid the advertiser, as it always does—but the whole country profited beside.

This slogan has since slipped into practical use in every corner of commercial America. Excepting perhaps its fellow slogan "Safety First," which reduced the accident death rate enormously, it has done more good in the world than any business phrase ever coined. It has been the means of discontinuing the time-honored practice among large metropolitan department and specialty stores of keeping open in the evenings a week or two preceding Christmas Eve. It has enabled manufacturers to prepare their goods and fill orders far enough in advance to insure clear store rooms long before the Yuletide candles were lighted. It prevented the disappointment of millions of Christmas shoppers who were wont in times past to wait for the more attractive novelties which turned up at the last moment. And not the least important it saved the heartaches of neglected ones who leaned upon the broken reed of mere man's thoughtlessness.

That phrase, "Do your Christmas Shopping Early," was instantly taken up and flashed before the eyes of the world through the medium of its newspaper. Just as every other worth while thing is told this nation of readers by the ever present, constant, reliable all-knowing morning, evening, weekly or Sunday newspaper. Nothing the world does is done without ITS knowledge, nothing you want the world to know can be made known without its aid. Almost any national manufacturers will tell you that most of his fame and profit were the product of newspaper advertising. No newspaper advertising who kept it up wisely ever lost money.

The newspaper pays the advertisers. The latter merely invests in business publicity. The cost of advertising is like a phantom Zeppelin—it never lights anywhere. It is a bugaboo made of thin air and a yellow streak. The common supposition that advertising expense is levied upon the consumer is likewise a fallacy. The fact of the matter is that the non-advertiser PAYS for it out of the business he loses to competitors who do advertise.

Advertising doubles output, halves overhead, divides selling cost and, by making two customers buy where ONLY ONE BOUGHT BEFORE, it creates a hundred per cent increase in profit—out of which any business man can well afford to pay for his own advertising.

The FORESTERS DAUGHTER

A ROMANCE OF THE BEAR TOOTH RANGE
By HAMLIN GARLAND

CHAPTER XV.

Wayland Hears From Home.

It was almost noon of the fourth day when the supervisor called up to say that he was at the office and would reach the ranch at 6 o'clock.

"I wish you would come home at once," his wife argued, and something in her voice convinced him that he was more needed at home than in the town.

"All right, mother. Hold the fort an hour, and I'll be there."

Mrs. McFarlane met him at the hitching post, and it required but a glance for him to read in her face a troubled state of mind.

"This has been a disastrous trip for Berrie," she said after one of the hands had relieved the supervisor of his horse.

"In what way?"

"She was a bit impatient. Mrs. Belden is filling the valley with the story of Berrie's stay in camp with Mr. Norcross."

His face showed a graver line. "It couldn't be helped. The horses had to be followed, and that youngster could not do it, besides, I expected to get back that night. Nobody but an old snop like Seth Belden would think evil of our girl, and, besides, Norcross is a man to be trusted."

"Of course he is, but the Beldens are ready to think evil of any one connected with us. And Cliff's assault on Wayland?"

"He looked up quickly. 'Assault! Did he make trouble?'"

"Yes. He overtook them on the trail and would have killed Norcross if Berrie hadn't interfered. He was crazy with jealousy."

"Nash didn't say anything about any assault."

"He didn't know it. Berrie told him that Norcross fell from his horse."

"Good God! I never suspected a word of this. I didn't think he'd do that."

"He fixed another penetrating look upon her face, and his voice was vibrant with anxiety as he said, 'You don't think there's anything wrong?'"

"No, nothing wrong, but she's profoundly in love with him. I never have seen her so wrapped up in any one. She thinks of nothing else. It scares me to see it, for I've studied him closely and I can't believe he feels the same toward her. His world is so different from ours. I don't know what to do or say. I fear she is in for a period of great unhappiness."

The return of the crew from the forest cut short this conference, and when McFarlane went in Berrie greeted him with such frank and joyous expression that all his fears vanished.

"Did you come over the high trail?" she asked.

"No, I came your way. I didn't want to take any chances of getting tired. It's still raining up there," he answered, then turned to Wayland.

"Here's your mail, Norcross, a whole half of it—and one telegram in the bunch. Hope it isn't serious."

Wayland took the bundle of letters and retired to his room, glad to escape the persistent stare of the cowhands. The dispatch was from his father and was curt and specific as a command.

"Shall be in Denver on the 23d. Meet me at the Palmer House. Am on my way to California. Come prepared to join me on the trip."

With the letters unopened in his lap he sat in silent thought, profoundly troubled by the instant decision which this message demanded of him. At first glance nothing was simpler than to pack up and go. He was only a tourist in the valley, with no tenuous attachment of any kind. To go meant a violent end of their pleasant romance. To think of flight and denied him, and yet his better judgment was clearly on the side of going.

"Much as I like her, much as I admire her, I cannot marry her. The simplest way is to frankly tell her so and go. It seems cowardly, but in the end she will be happier."

His letters carried him back into his own world. One was from Will Halliday, who was going with Professor Holmgren on an exploring trip up the Nile. "You must join us. Holmgren has promised to take you on." Another classmate wrote to know if he did not want to go into a land deal on the Gulf of Mexico. A girl asked, "Are you to be in New York this winter? I am. I've decided to go into this suffrage movement." And so, one by one, the threads which bound him to eastern city life resumed their place.

After all, this Colorado outling, even though it should last two years, would only be a vacation. His real life was in the cities of the east. Channing as Berrie was, potent as she seemed, she was, after all, a fixed part of the nomadic land and not to be taken from it. At the moment marriage with her appeared absurd.

A knock at his door and the supervisor's voice gave him a keen shock. "Come in," he called, springing to his feet with a thrill of dread, of alarm.

McFarlane entered slowly and shut the door behind him. His manner was serious and his voice gravely gentle as he said, "I hope that telegram does not call you away."

"It is from my father asking me to meet him in Denver," answered Norcross, with faltering breath. "He's on his way to California. Won't you sit down?"

The other man took a seat with quiet dignity. "Seems like a mighty fine chance, don't it? I've always wanted to see the coast. When do you plan for to pull out?"

"I haven't decided to go at all. I'm still dazed by the suddenness of it. I didn't know my father was planning this trip."

"I see. Well, before you decide to go I'd like to have a little talk with you. My daughter has told me part of what happened to you on the trail. I want to know all of it. You're young, but you've been out in the world, and you know what people can say about you and my girl."

His voice became level and menacing as he added, "And I don't intend to have her put in wrong on account of you."

Norcross was quick to reply. "Nobody will dare accuse her of wrongdoing. She's a noble girl. No one will dare to criticize her for what she could not prevent."

"You don't know the Beldens. My girl's character will be on trial in every house in the county tomorrow. The Belden side of it will appear in the city papers. Sympathy will be with Cliff. Berrie will be made an issue by my enemies. They'll get me through her."

"Good Lord," exclaimed Norcross in sudden realization of the gravity of the case, "what beasts they are!"

"Norse's came. I'll seize upon it and work it hard," McFarlane went on, with calm insistence. "They want to bring the district forester down on me. This is a fine chance to bugger me. They will make a great deal of my putting you on the trail. Our little secret will be out, and she can't fit in where he belongs. It all seems hopeless to me. Wouldn't it be better for her to suffer for a little while now than to make a mistake that will last a lifetime?"

"Mebbe it would, mother, but the decision is not ours. She's too strong for us to control. She's of age, and if she comes to a full understanding of the situation she can decide the question a whole lot better than either of us."

"That's true," she sighed. "In some ways she's bigger and stronger than both of us. Sometimes I wish she were not so self-reliant."

When Wayland caught the startled look on Berrie's face he knew that she had learned from her father the contents of his telegram and that she would require an explanation.

"Are you going away?" she asked.

"Yes. At least, I must go down to Denver to see my father. I shall be gone only overnight."

"And will you tell him about our trip?" she persisted, with unflinching earnestness. "And about—me?"

He gave her a chair and took a seat himself before replying. "Yes, I shall tell him all about it and about you and your father and mother. He shall know how kind you've all been to me."

He said this bravely, and at the moment he meant it, but as his father's big, impassive face and cold, keen eyes came back to him his courage sank and in spite of his firm resolution some part of his secret anxiety communicated itself to the girl, who asked many questions with intent to find out more particularly what kind of man the old Norcross was.

Wayland's replies did not entirely reassure her. He admitted that his father was harsh and domineering in character and that he was ambitious to have his son take up and carry forward his work. "He was willing enough to have me go to college till he found I was specializing on wrong lines."

"Then I had to fight in order to keep my place. He's glad I'm out here, for he thinks I'm regaining my strength. But just as soon as I'm well enough to expect me to go to Chicago and take charge of the western office. Of course I don't want to do that. I'd rather work out some problem in chemistry that interests me, but I may have to give in for a time at least."

"Will your mother and sisters be with your father?"

"No, indeed! You couldn't get any one of them west of the Hindou river."

McFarlane was silent for a moment.

"But what can I do? I'm at your service. When shall I go?"

McFarlane was silent for a moment.

answered: "You can at least stay on the ground and help fight. This is no time to stampee."

"You're right. I'll stay, and I'll make any statement you see fit. I'll do anything that will protect Berrie."

McFarlane again looked him square in the eyes. "Is there a—an agreement between you?"

"Nothing formal—that is, I mean, I admire her, and I told her— He stopped, feeling himself on the verge of the irretrievable. "She's a splendid girl," he went on. "I like her exceedingly, but I've known her only a few weeks."

McFarlane interrupted. "Girls are flighty critters," he said sadly. "I don't know why she's taken to you so terribly strong, but she has. She doesn't seem to care what people say so long as they do not blame you. But if you should pull out you might just as well cut her heart to pieces." His voice broke, and it was a long time before he could finish. "You're not at fault—I know that—but if you can stay on a little while and make it an ounce or two easier for her and for her mother I wish you'd do it."

Wayland extended his hand imploringly. "Of course I'll stay. I never really thought of leaving." In the grip of McFarlane's hand was something warm and tender.

Berrie could not be entirely deceived. She read in her father's face a subtle change of line which she related to something Wayland had said. "Did he tell you what was in the telegram? Has he got to go away?" she asked anxiously.

"Yes, he said it was from his father."

"What does his father want of him?"

"He's on his way to California and wants Wayland to go with him, but Wayland says he's not going."

A pang shot through Berrie's heart. "He mustn't go—he isn't able to go," she exclaimed, and her pain, her fear, came out in her sharpened, constricted tone. "I won't let him go—till he's well."

Mrs. McFarlane gently interposed. "He'll have to go, honey. If his father needs him."

"Let his father come here." She rose and, going to his door, decisively knocked. "May I come in?" she demanded rather than asked before her mother could protest. "I must see you."

Wayland opened the door, and she entered, leaving her parents staring each other in mute helplessness.

Mrs. McFarlane turned toward her husband with a face of despair. "She's ours no longer, Joe. Our time of bereavement has come."

He took her in his arms. "There, there, mother, don't cry. It can't be helped. You cut loose from your parents and came to me in just the same way. Our daughter's a grown woman and must have her own life. All we can do is to defend her against the coyotes who are busy with her name."

"But what of him, Joe? He can't care for her as she does for him. Can't you see that?"

"He'll do the right thing, mother; he told me he would. He knows how much depends on his staying here now and he intends to do it."

"But in the end, Joe, after this scandal is lived down, can he—will he—marry her? And if he marries her can they live together and be happy? His way of life is so different. He can't content himself here, and she can't fit in where he belongs. It all seems hopeless to me. Wouldn't it be better for her to suffer for a little while now than to make a mistake that will last a lifetime?"

"Mebbe it would, mother, but the decision is not ours. She's too strong for us to control. She's of age, and if she comes to a full understanding of the situation she can decide the question a whole lot better than either of us."

SOME people seem to think that by creating a lot of new banking organizations and paying salaries to a lot more people the farmers are going to be able to borrow money for four per cent. instead of seven.

DETROIT is paying for her fame as the automobile center of America. Her traffic regulations are the poorest in the country and she kills more pedestrians than any other several cities.

Entered at Charlevoix Postoffice as second class matter.

FRANK C. Lowry is on the job again. He is the philanthropic gentleman who was paid by the sugar trust to lobby the free sugar provision through congress. Lowry posed as secretary of the "Committee of Wholesale Grocers," an organization the existence of which was confined to the fertile mentality of its secretary. Under this committee name he sent out circulars printed on yellow paper in batches of 150,000 at a time, all over the country, and tried to convince housewives of the truth of Senator Ollie James's statement that free sugar meant a reduction in price of two cents a pound.

Mr. Lowry's latest move in the interest of the "people" is to suggest the placing of a consumption tax of one cent a pound on sugar—briefly, to tax the domestic competitor of the sugar trust out of business, so that imported foreign sugar handled by the refiners will hog the whole market.

At present the refiners who are the importers of raw sugar pay duty of one cent a pound on their imported raw sugar. The Cuban product makes up their entire importation. One hundred pounds of raw sugar makes 93 pounds of refined. The domestic production is not subject to tax, but by substituting a uniform consumption tax for dutiable sugar the refiners would gain seven cents a hundred and their competitors lose one hundred cents, a net gain to the refiners of $1.07 a hundred. That would mean the end of competition for the sugar trust.

"Because of the duty," says Lowry in his letter to President Wilson containing his latest suggestion, "the consumers will pay about $84,000,000 more than would be the cost under free sugar. Of this amount the United States government will collect in duty approximately $45,000,000, less about $8,000,000, which will be refunded in drawbacks on sugar exported. Because of the enhanced value of their product as a result of the duty the producers within our borders will divide as an indirect subsidy the balance of approximately $38,000,000." Thus, according to Mr. Lowry, the domestic producers get more from the tariff than does the government.

This does not at all square with the findings of either the Republican or the Democratic members of the finance committee after the hearing of April, 1912, when Mr. Lowry was a witness. The report of the Republican members stated:

"The committee does not subscribe to the contention that the retail price per pound of our entire consumption is raised by an amount equal to the duty collected per pound on our dutiable sugar imports, nor does it concede that if the duty were abolished the retail price of sugar would be lower by the amount of the duty remitted."

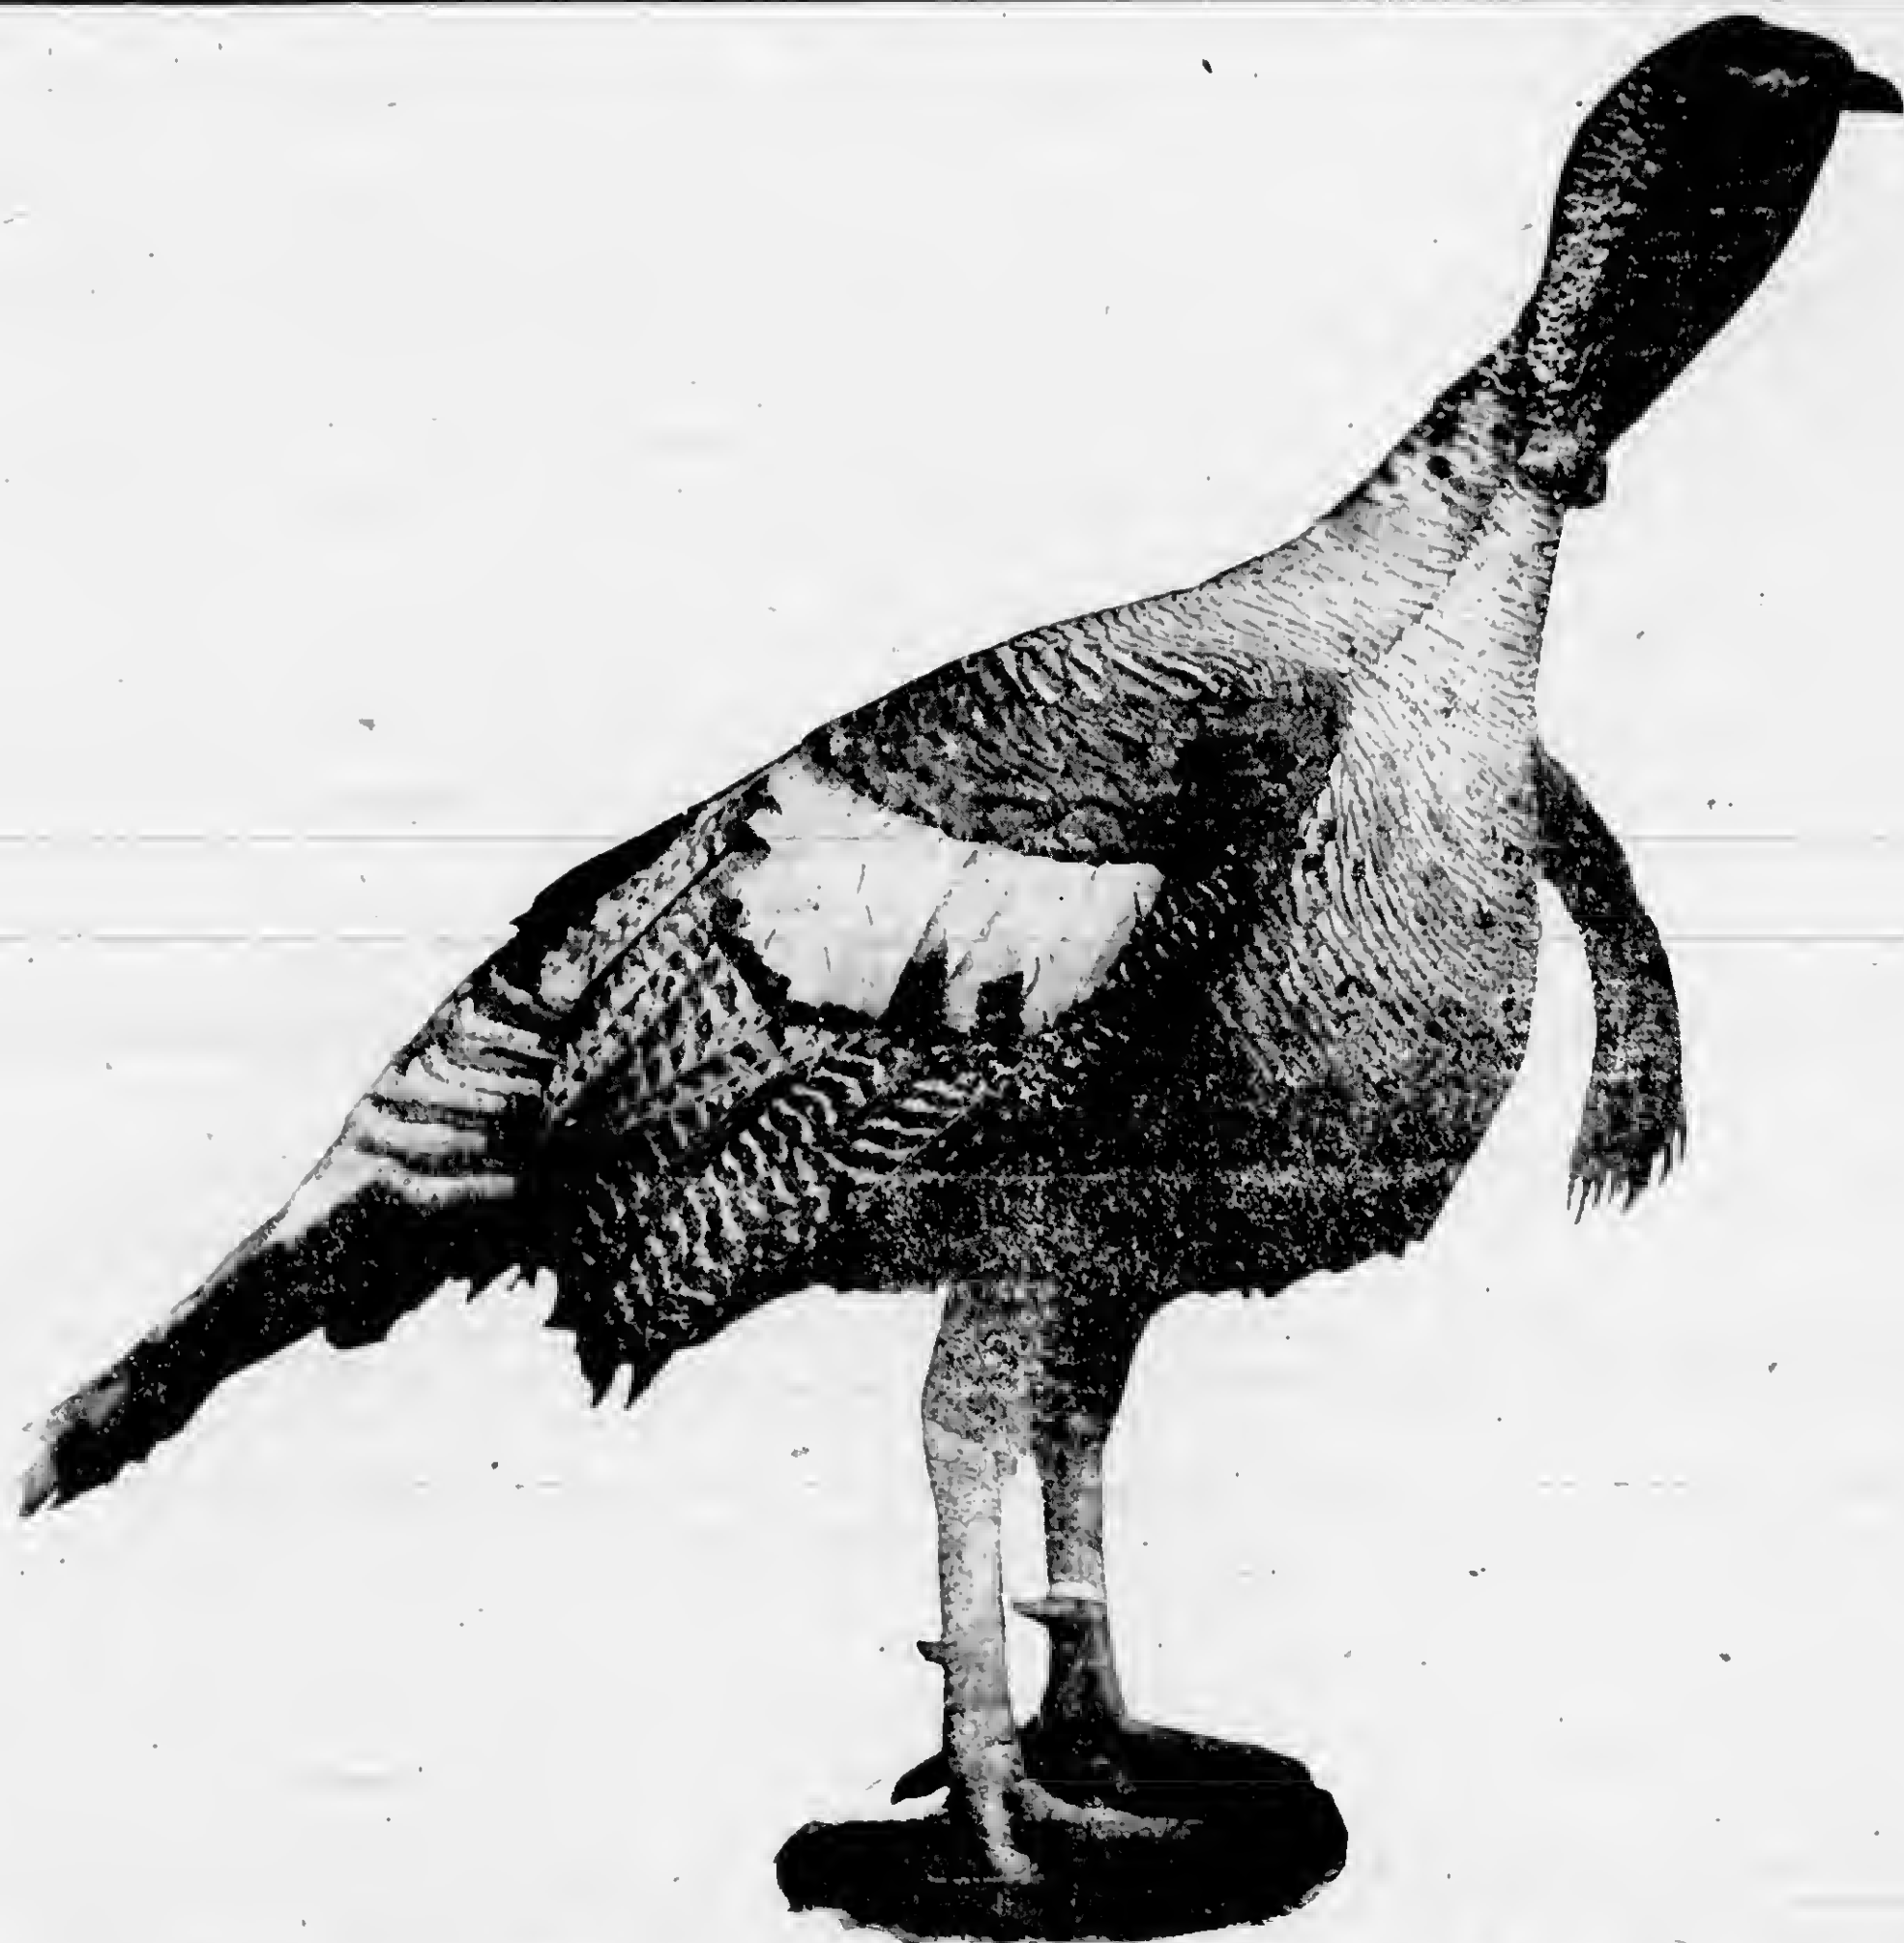

The minority report, signed by Senators Bailey, Simmons, Stone, Johnson, Kern and John Sharp Williams, declared:

"The tariff on sugar is peculiarly a revenue tariff. Very much the major part of the tax levied upon the consumer of sugar in this country goes actually into the treasury of the United States."

use and behoof and benefit of the American people. A minor part of the tax goes into the pockets of the producers.

Yet every last one of these gentlemen with the exception of Bailey retired and Kern paired when the test came and they, hearing the crack of the White House whip, voted for free sugar against their expressed convictions. Hence the hole in which the Democrats find themselves to-day on account of the sugar schedule.

The president has finally declared in favor of adequate preparation "not for war but for defence," as he puts it. But, in looking forward to putting such a program through congress, it behooves the president to prepare for war with Mr. Bryan.

GIVE THANKS!

Thanksgiving

By ANNA BLACKSTONE VALIQUET

THOU dost bless us, O our Father,
Every day and every hour.
While awake and while we're sleeping
We are safe in thy great power.

Thou dost show us paths of beauty,
Leading on where all is bright,
Far beyond the clouds and darkness,
Into conscious realms of light.

All the earthly cares and struggles
Have a mission here, we find.
They unfold the priceless beauty—
Hidden jewels in mankind.

And we thank thee for thy blessings,
For the sunlight, birds and flowers,
For our lives and all the dear ones
Sacred to these hearts of ours.

And if any should be absent
In our homes Thanksgiving day,
We shall know that thou art with them,
Blessing in thy perfect way.

In the great eternal kingdom
We shall meet with one accord,
Giving thanks and joyful praises
At the table of our Lord.

Every Day Thanksgiving Day.

We should make every day a Thanksgiving day. I hold the same sentiments upon this subject as the late Dr. Martine Babcock of New York.

He said: "Why don't people have 364 days of thanksgiving and only one of scolding? The world would be so much

A SONG OF MR. O TURKEY

By FRANK L. STANTON.

Hi, Mister Turkey! Ter see you struttin' round?
Folks would think, I reckon, you weigh a hundred pound.
You steppin' mighty high now, but I bet dey'll take you down, Fer yander sets de big Thanksgiving
table.

Hi, Mister Turkey! De folks is come fer call;
No matter if you weigh a ton dar's appetites fer all.
Ever hear dat story 'bout Pride what had de fall?
Yahder sets de big Thanksgiving
table.

The Man Behind the Bird

By MINNA IRVING

(Copyright, 1915, by American Press Association.)

WE honor the heroes of history's page Who gild it with greatness and glory—
Columbus, De Solo and all of the rest,
Immortal in song and in story.
They sailed to discover this land of the west—
Through weather unpleasant and murky,
But there is another we should not forget—
The man who discovered the turkey.

Oh, gather the drumsticks, clean polished and picked,
From each bountiful Thanksgiving
table
And rear him a monument loftier far
Than the highest in fact or in tale!
Though nameless, he shines through the mist of the years
Like the sun through a fog billow
murky,
So let us give thanks while enjoying the bird
For the man who discovered the turkey.

To Thank is to Remember.

The Anglo-Saxon verb "thencan" means to remember, and from it as a root we get our English words "think" and "thank." These words so closely related remind us that thankfulness is a result of thoughtfulness and that visions of the past will enable us to appreciate the victories of the present.

School Reports

Ellsworth School Notes

The Ellsworth Public school, is not a place to fool.

Business is its motto

And we do it, as a rule!

Arthur Elzinga entered the kindergarten last week.

Mrs. I. Loague was a visitor of the school last Monday.

Bessie Weiss was a visitor of the school last Thursday.

Tests were given on Tuesday and Friday of this week.

The Boy Scouts had their first organized meeting Saturday morning.

Rev. Shattuck conducted the chapel exercises on Monday of this week.

Violet Rodgers and Ida Shug were visitors of the school last Friday afternoon.

The children have made great plans for Thanksgiving. It is our hope that these plans will be realized.

The soccer ball, which the boys had sent for, has arrived. They are now finding out what it is made of.

The penny social which was given last Friday night was a success. The Boy Scouts and Camp Fire Girls realizing enough to start their organizations.

On recent inquiries we have found that there are more than forty eighth graders in the township. How many of these will go to high school is determined by how their way is paid and where they have to go. If their way can be paid cheaply they will go, if not they will stay away, and not know what a high school is.

We wish to appeal to the citizens of the town to help in the cigarette problem by not allowing boys to congregate any where on their premises for the purpose of smoking. It is an evil that seems to be spreading and we are surprised to find that there are boys who, we thought had better judgment, indulging in a habit that has a tendency to blunt moral consciousness and produce bums. We realize that there are many who smoke because this is their idea of manhood, but manhood stands for cleanliness and uncleanliness is the marked feature of the opposite type.

Cigarettes are followed by the tilt of the cap or hat, then a slouch walk, later a slangy "Wise" tone, and at last by immorality, all indications of a lack of sensitivity and decent judgment, caused by mental bluntness of their moral consciousness due to the narcotic effects of cigarettes. Any boy under 21 years of age, found smoking cigarettes is liable to arrest and fine. We do not want any thing like this to happen to our boys, so please take heed. No boy can do his best work in school, or any place else and be a smoker of cigarettes.
We want our boys to be good students and to do this they must be clean in their habits.

Essex School Notes

Miss Dena Hennip was home over Sunday.

The pupils are having drawing once a week.

There are 27 scholars enrolled in the Essex school.

John Wieland joined the Boy Scouts and was elected scribe.

The 5th, 6th and 8th graders are having a spelling contest.

The eighth graders are enjoying Longitude and Solar time this week.

Jerry Aardema was absent from school Tuesday on account of sickness.

Our school has new curtains which add much to the appearance of the room.

We are all busy working on our Thanksgiving program, which will be given Wednesday afternoon.

Ada Cooper visited school Friday afternoon to attend our Thanksgiving rehearsal, as she can not attend Wednesday.

Everything is going on nicely, only our school needs many repairs before winter. The school bell has been out of working order for over a week.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowman were very much alarmed Friday afternoon, when they were unable to find their little daughter, Isabell. After a long search she was found sleeping peacefully by a corn stack, in Hennip's field.

The following pupils were not absent or tardy last month: Beatrice Wieland, Ray Bowman, Grace Hoogerwerf,
Willie Tillotson, Maggie Cooper, John Tillotson, Lela Bowman, Jerry

Atwood School

Lawrence Supernaw and his father have moved into the Clark district.

The first, second, and third grades have been drawing and coloring turkeys.

Peter Burns has entered the fourth grade and Albert DeYoung has entered the first grade.

The first graders are very proud of the new readers which they have just started to use.

Fanny Petter, who was hurt while playing on the school ground, is much improved and will soon be able to attend school.

Ben Pendell of North Adams, Hillsdale county, who has been up north hunting deer, visited his uncle John Triplett Wednesday.

The per cent of attendance for the primary grades last month was 94.
We are hoping that the per cent will be 96 this month.

We wish that the parents would see that their children are in school every day, as nothing short of a consecutive attendance will bring good results.

Connie Klooster and his mother, Mrs.
Henry Klooster, left Monday for Holland, Michigan. They will remain there until spring. Connie will be missed from school.

As a matter of introduction we here state that, as usual, our school has two teachers. Miss Ruth Green has charge of the primary grade and J. A. Triplett the grades from the fifth to the ninth inclusive.

Poem of Gratitude of Long Ago

LORD, thou hast given me a cell
Wherein to dwell,
A little house whose humble roof
Is weather proof.
Under the sparrows of which I lie
Both soft and drier,
Where thou, my chamber for
to ward,
Hast set a guard
Of harmless thoughts to watch and keep Me while I sleep.
Low is my porch, as is my fate,
Both void of state,
And yet the threshold of my door
Is worn by the poor,
Who thither come and freely get Good words or meat.

—Robert Herrick.

All-Aboard Chestnut Specials

A dandy preacher was lost in the happy selection of his text, which he repeated in vigorous accents of pleading. "Oh, brethren, at de las' day dere gwine ter be sheep and dere's gwins ter be goats. Who's gwine ter be sheep, an' who's gwine ter be goats? Let's all try to be like de li'l' white lambs, brethren. Shall we be de goats, sisters? Naw, we's gwine ter be de sheep. Who's gwine ter be de sheep, brethren, an' who's gwine to be de goats? Tak' care ob your souls, sisters; tak' care ob your souls. Remember, dere's gwine to be goats an' sheep. Who's gwine to be de sheep and who's gwine to be de goats?" Just then a solitary Irishman had been sitting in the back of the church, listening attentively, rose and said: "O'll be de goat. Go on; tell us de joke, Elder. O'll be de goat."

The following matrimonial problem is a puzzle you can figure out at leisure: John Harwood had two daughters by his first wife, of whom the eldest was married to Jim Haswell, the son, and the youngest to John Haswell, the father. Haswell, Sr., had a daughter by his first wife. This daughter old Harwood married, and had a son. The elder Haswell's second wife can say then with a truth: "My father is my son, and I am my mother's mother; my sister is my daughter, and I'm grandmother to my brother."

Two gushing school girls were talking over the wire the other day. Both were discussing what they should wear at the coming Halloween party. In the midst of this important conversation a masculine voice interrupted, asking humbly for a number. One of the girls became indignant and scornfully asked: "What line do you think you are on, anyhow?" "Well," said the man, "I am not sure, but judging from what I've heard, I should say I was on a clothes line."

"What makes you distrust the new doctor?" "He's not enough like other doctors. When he diagnosed Willie's green upple pain, he didn't say 'a word about the possibility of appendicitis.'"

THE PROPER COURSE

Information of Priceless Value to Every Charlevoix Citizen

How to act in an emergency is knowledge of inestimable worth, and this is particularly true of the diseases and ills of the human body. If you suffer with kidney backache, urinary disorders, or any form of kidney trouble, the advice contained in the following statement should add a valuable asset to your store of knowledge. What could be more convincing proof of the efficiency of Doan's Kidney Pills than the statement of a nearby resident who has used them and publicly tells of the benefit derived?

Mrs. Charles Dunning, 816 Michigan Street, Petoskey, Michigan, says: "I was annoyed with my kidneys and suffered with such severe pains across my back, that I could not rest well at night. I was subject to headaches and spells of dizziness. I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised and used them. They brought me prompt and lasting benefit and I have been free from all aches and pains since. Others of the family have used Doan's Kidney Pills with good results."

Price 60c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Dunning had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Suffrage Notes

Does anyone think that suffrage is a dead issue in the eastern states as a result of the recent elections? Not by any means. The million suffrage voters are triumphantly alive and jubilantly ready for the new campaigns. At a meeting in New York city $100,000 was raised amid enthusiastic rejoicing over the "near victory." One man pledged money in memory of his mother, another in the name of his young sons. A third pledged $1000 a year for five years, or until the vote is won. An issue with such a spirit back of it cannot die.

The men and women of Iceland recently celebrated the granting of full suffrage to its women. The members of the Icelandic legislative assembly joined in the celebration and the king and queen of Denmark sent a telegram of congratulation.

Iowa is the next campaign state. The election will be June 5th, 1916. Senator Cummins has assured the women that he is heartily in favor of their suffrage plan and will work with them loyally.

The Upper Peninsula is aroused to the need of securing the co-operation of women, and the Educational Association in recent session at Marquette passed a resolution endorsing equal suffrage.

This country is a republic. It is our boast that no kings nor monarchs rule in America, but "Big Tom" Foley, Tammany leader of the Second Assembly District of New York city, said: "I voted against woman suffrage and I instructed all my men to do likewise." "My men," and this is free America!

A Warning.
(Alice Duer Miller in the New York Tribune.)

We do earnestly urge the men who voted against suffrage to safeguard their lives in every possible way.

No; this is not a threat. It is a warning based on experience. In the suffrage states many men voted against it.

They have all melted away. Hardly one of them can be discovered to-day.

Within a few years they will have melted away in this state. Gentlemen, do be careful of yourselves!

School Commissioner's Notes

Score Card for Rural School

The first "Standard School" requirements put out by the state department were rather vague and indefinite. They have since then adopted a general score card by means of which the Inspector may decide just where a school stands. A first class "Standard School" should be worth over 800 points and should be striving to reach the 1000 mark. By filling out this score card for your school, you can tell what you still need and along what lines to improve.

A number of teachers find it almost impossible to do the work expected of them because their predecessors have made promotions in cases where pupils have not come up to the standard set by the state course of study. Some of these pupils are really bright but are passed on year by year not realizing that their work is one or two years behind the real standard. They awaken with the sad experience of failing in the state eighth grade examination. In many cases they are not to blame for failure, neither is their present teacher.

To protect these pupils and to keep these teachers, as well as to raise the standard of the work done in our county, bringing it closer to the state course of study, the commissioner has decided to introduce a system of county examinations. The questions will be based on the state course of study and recommended tests as indicated in the directory. Midyear examination questions will be sent to every teacher on January, covering all subjects taught in the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades. The papers must be written in ink, signed by the pupils and handed in. The teacher will look over her own papers, mark them, record the standings and then mail or express the papers to the commissioner to be O. K.'d and put on file for future reference.

We have just as conscientious teachers and just as bright boys and girls in our county as can be found anywhere, and we want our county to have the fewest possible failures when the state is comparing us with our neighboring counties. This will make an immense amount of work for the commissioner, but if it will protect the teachers who are not to blame, if it will help the boys and girls who really try, the work will surely be worth while.

THANKSGIVING ENRICHES AMERICA'S LIFE.

Thanksgiving day is one of the most precious and heartening anniversaries in the American year. That a people should be called by their president to reckon on the mercies and privileges received at the hands of God is a most hallowed and sanctifying ministry and most assuredly enriches and invigorates the national life.

But Thanksgiving should not be confined to material bounty. It should extend its range and include the blessings found in the broadening day of knowledge and in the lifting of all forms of oppression from those who are bearing a needless yoke. It should even go beyond the range of patriotism and become cosmopolitan as it contemplates the heaven of freedom and humanity which is working in every part of the world.

Thanksgiving of this wide and ennobling kind would surely send a thankful people into the ways of unselfish and chivalrous service.

The Human Kind.

"Well, my son, your Uncle William is about the biggest one I ever knew. If there are any bigger ones I don't want to meet them."—Chicago Herald.

with a log chain. My sisters were both born in Michigan, but they want to forget it. They pretend they have forgotten it. They both have New Yorkitis. Nothing but the big hotels will do them now.

"I suppose they think we're all 'in-juns' out here?"
"Oh, no, not so bad as that. But they wouldn't comprehend anything about you except your muscles. That would catch 'em. They'd worship your splendid health, just as I do. It's pitiful the way they both try to put on weight. They're always testing some new food, some new tonic. They'll do anything except exercise regularly and go to bed at 10 o'clock."

CHAPTER XVI.

Deserting the Ranch.

ALL that Wayland said of his family deepened Berrie's dismay. Their interests were so alien to her own.

"I'm afraid to have you go even for a day," she admitted, with simple honesty, which moved him deeply. "I don't know what I should do if you went away. I think of nothing but you now."

Her face was pitiful, and he put his arm about her neck as if she were a child. "You mustn't do that. You must go on with your life just as if I'd never been. Think of your father's job—the forest and the ranch."

"I can't do it. I've lost interest in the service. I never want to go into the high country again, and I don't want you to go either. It's too savage and cruel."

"That is only a mood," he said confidently. "It is splendid up there. I shall certainly go back some time." "Of course, we are not rich, but we are not poor, and my mother's family is one of the oldest in Kentucky." She uttered this with a touch of her mother's quiet dignity. "Your father need not despise us."

"So far as my father is concerned, family don't count and neither does money. But he confidently expects me to take up his business in Chicago, and I suppose it is my duty to do so. If he finds me looking ill he may order me into the ranks at once."

"I'll go there. I'll do anything you want me to do," she urged. "You can tell your father that I'll help you in the office. I can learn. I'm ready to do a typewriter—anything."

He was silent at the face of her naive expression of self-sacrificing love, and after a moment she added hesitatingly: "I wish I could meet your father. Perhaps he'd come up here if you asked him to do so."

"He seized upon the suggestion. 'My George, I believe he would! I don't want to go to town. I just believe I'll write him that I'll talk up here and not come.'"

A knock at the door interrupted Wayland, and Mrs. McFarlane's voice, filled with new excitement, called out, "Berrie, the district office is on the wire!"

Berrie opened the door and confronted her mother, who said, "Mr. Evelyn has phoned that the afternoon papers contain an account of a fight at Coal City between Settle and one of Al-Belden's men and that the district forster is coming down to investigate it."

"Let him come," answered Berrie defiantly. "I can't do us any harm. What was the row about?"

"I didn't hear much of it. Your father was at the phone."

"Why, it seems that after I left yesterday Settle rode down the valley with Belden's outfit, and they all got to drinking, ending in a row, and Tony bent one of Belden's men almost to death. The sheriff has gone over to get Tony, and the Beldens declare they're going to railroad him. That means we'll all be brought into it. Belden has seized the moment to prefer charges against me for keeping Settle in the service and for putting a nonresident on the roll as guard. The whelp will die up everything he can to queer me with the office. All that kept him from doing it before was Cliff's interest in you."

"He can't make any of his charges stick," declared Berrie.

"Of course he can't. He knows that. But he can bring us all into court. You and Mr. Norcross will both be called as witnesses. For it seems that Tony was defending your name. The papers call it a fight for a girl. Oh, it's a sweet mess. You and Berrie and Mrs.

McFarlane must get out of here before you are subpoenaed."

"And leave you to fight it out alone?" exclaimed his wife. "I shall do nothing of the kind. Berrie and Mr. Norcross can go."

"That won't do," retorted McFarlane quickly. "That won't do at all. You must go with them. I can take care of myself. I will not have you dragged into this muckhole."

Berrie now argued against running away. Her blood was up. She joined her mother. "We won't leave you to inherit all this trouble. Who will look after the ranch? Who will keep house for you?"

McFarlane remained firm. "I'll manage. Don't worry about me. Just get out of reach. The more I consider this thing the more worrisome it gets. Suppose Cliff should come back to testify?"

"He won't. If he does I'll have him arrested for trying to kill Wayland," retorted Berrie.

"And make the whole thing worse? No; you are all going to cross the range. You can start out as if for a little turn round the valley and just naturally keep going. It can't do any harm, and it may save a nasty time in court."

"One would think we were a lot of criminals," remarked Wayland.

"That's the way you'll be treated," retorted McFarlane. "Belden has retained old Wilby, the foulest old brute in the business, and he'll bring you all into it if he can."

"But running away from it will not prevent talk," argued his wife.

"Not entirely, but talk and testimony are two different things. Suppose they call daughter to the stand? Do you want her cross examined as to what basis there was for this gossip? They know something of Cliff's being let out and that will inflame them. He may be at the mill this minute."

"I guess you're right," said Norcross sadly. "Our delightful excursion into the forest has led us into a predicament from which there is only one way of escape, and that is flight."

McFarlane was again called to the telephone. London, with characteristic brevity, conveyed to him the fact that Mrs. Belden was at home and busily phoning scandalous stories about the country. "If you don't stop her she's going to poison every ear in the valley," ended the ranger.

"You'd think they'd all know my daughter well enough not to believe anything Mrs. Belden says," responded McFarlane bitterly.

All the boys are ready to do what Tony did. But nobody can stop this old fool's mouth but you. Cliff has disappeared, and that adds to the excitement."

"Thank the boys for me," said McFarlane, "and tell them not to fight. Tell 'em to keep cool. It will all be cleared up soon."

As McFarlane went out to order the horses looked up Wayland followed him as far as the bars. "I'm conscience smitten over this thing, supervisor, for I am aware that I am the cause of all your trouble."

"Don't let that worry you," responded the older man. But he spoke with effort. "It can't be helped. It was all unavoidable."

"The most appalling thing to me is the fact that not even your daughter's popularity can neutralize the gossip of a woman like Mrs. Belden. My being an outsider counts against Berrie, and I'm ready to do anything—anything," he repeated earnestly. "I love your daughter, Mr. McFarlane, and I'm ready to marry her in once if you think best. She's a noble girl, and I cannot bear to be the cause of her humiliation."

There was mist in the supervisor's eyes as he turned them on the young man. "I'm right glad to hear you say that, my boy." He reached out his hand, and Wayland took it. "I know you'd say the word when the time came. I didn't know how strongly she felt toward you till today. I know she liked you, of course, for she said so, but I didn't know that she had plum set her heart on you. I didn't expect her to marry a city man, but I like you, and—well, she's the doctor. What says he suits me. Don't you be afraid of her not meeting all comers."

He went on after a pause, "She's never seen much of city life, but she'll hold her own anywhere, you can gamble on that."

"She has wonderful adaptability, I know," answered Wayland slowly. "But I don't like to take her away from here—now you."

"If you hadn't come she would have married Cliff, and what kind of a life would she have led with him?" demanded McFarlane. "I know Cliff was rough, but I couldn't convince her that he was cheap. I live only for her happiness, my boy, and though I know you will take her away from me, I believe you can make her happy, and so I give her over to you. As to time and place, arrange that—with her mother."

He turned and walked away, unable to utter another word.

Wayland's throat was aching also, and he went back into the house with a sense of responsibility which exalted him into sturdier manhood.

Here he met him in a pretty gown, a dress he had never seen her wear, a costume which transformed her into something entirely feminine. She seemed to have put away the self-reliant manner of the trail and in its stead presented the lambent gaze, the tremulous tips of the bride. As he looked at her thus transformed his heart eased out its hesitancy and he entered upon his new adventure without further question or regret.

It was 3 o'clock of a fine, clear, golden afternoon as they said goodby to McFarlane and started eastward, as if for a little drive. Berrie held the reins in spite of Wayland's protestations. "These bronches are only about half tamed," she said. "They need watching. I know them better than you do." Therefore he submitted, well knowing that she was entirely competent and fully informed.

At last the topmost looming crags of the continental divide cut the skyline, and then in the smooth hollow between two rounded grassy knolls, Berrie halted, and they all silently contemplated the two worlds. To the west and north lay an endless spread of mountains, wave on wave, snow lined, savage, sullen in the dying light, while to the east and southeast the foothills faded into the plain, whose dim cities, insubstantial as flecks in a veil of violet mist, were hardly distinguishable without the aid of glasses.

"I'm right glad to hear you say that, my boy."

Berrie turned in her seat and was about to take up the reins when Wayland asserted himself. "Wait a moment. Here's where my dominion begins. Here's where you change seats with me. I'm the driver now."

She looked at him with questioning, smiling glance. "Can you drive? It's all the way downhill and steep."

"If I can't I'll ask your aid. I'm old enough to remember the family carriage. I've even driven a four in hand."

Their descent was rapid, but it was long after dark before they reached Flume, which lay up the valley to the right. It was a poor little decaying mining town set against the hillside, and had but one hotel, a sun warped and sagging pine building just above the station.

"Not much like the Profile house," said Wayland as he drew up to the porch. "But I see no choice."

"There isn't any," Berrie assured him.

Grandmothers Gifts to the Tiny Tot

These tiny booties were made of swansdown and ornamented with a design in cross stitch. The little cap was made of the same material and also was embroidered. It grandmothers or baby's friends these gifts would be particularly timely for the baby granddaughter or grandson.

But "grandmothers" may have no idle moments, so perhaps she would be glad to know that all of the toyshops keep these articles on hand. The shops now are filled with dainty articles for the tiny stranger who selected this holiday time to make his protesting debut.

FIRST TEST OF PRIMARY LAWS

State Will Express Presidential Preference
by Vote in Spring.

Conclusion Over Provisions of Measure Causing Uneasiness Among Party Leaders.

On the first Monday of next April Michigan will have its first experience with the presidential preference primary and the selection of presidential candidates by the political parties of the state will lift the otherwise bleak and bare April elections to the plane of national importance.

The presidential preference primary was designed to go into effect in 1912, but the legislature at the special session of that year played a joke on itself by providing for an election that could not be held, and consequently the statute is not effective until 1916. While thus far there is little interest in the primary on the surface, the fact that enough states now have the primary seriously to affect convention results has caused much thought on the part of especially the Republican national leaders.

Because of the fact that the delegates to the national convention from all the primary states will be bound, for at least the first ballot, to carry out the decision of the primary voters, "favorite sons" are practically assured of votes, and if there are sufficient favorite sons the plethora of candidates will give plenty of opportunity for dark horses and compromise candidates.

It is known that already the Republican national committee has taken cognizance of the possibilities that may arise from this circumstance and is doing some earnest thinking on the subject of favorite sons. In Michigan there is not yet sufficient crystallization of sentiment to predict the names and number of presidential candidates upon the April ballot, but one candidate is sure to be named, former Governor Hughes of New York. Several Detroit admirers of the New York man have already prepared to secure the 100 signatures required to place a candidate's name upon the ballot.

The Michigan law provides that when 100 enrolled voters of any party so petition, the secretary of state must enter the name of their choice upon the primary ballot. The candidate receiving the high-st number of votes from his party shall be declared the candidate of that political party for his state.

There is some confusion over the fact that the law does not specify that the delegates to the convention must stick. The general assumption among local political attorneys is that the delegates will be bound to cast their first ballot for the successful candidate and that they may thereafter exercise their discretion.

Petitions to have presidential candidates' names placed upon the ballot must be filed with the secretary of state before noon of March 23, 1916.

Elbert Hubbard Says Advertising Is Very Ethical

"Advertising is simply announcing to the world in a effective way where you are, who you are and what you have to offer in the way of human service or commodity," says Elbert Hubbard. "All live men are advertisers, and the only man who should not advertise is the man who has nothing to offer the world in the way of human service, and such a man is a dead one, whether he knows it or not. Advertising is a legitimate and ethical proposition. Life is too short for you to hide yourself away, muffled in your own modesty, and let the world hunt you out."

PIONEER CALLED

Death Claims Charles Allard at Age of 85—Was Resident of Charlevoix 25 Years.

Charles Allard, an old pioneer of Charlevoix died at the home of the Sisters of the Poor, at Grand Rapids Thanksgiving Day. Death was due to old age. Mr. Allard has been at the Grand Rapids home for the past three years.

Mr. Allard was born on Mackinac Island July 11, 1830, and engaged in the fishing business when very young. He came to Charlevoix to locate about 25 years ago, where he remained until leaving for Grand Rapids. Mr. Allard used to come to Charlevoix from Mackinac Island on regular trips to carry maple sugar to the island. At that time Pine River was but a mere creek and was crossed by the early settlers with the use of a plank thrown across from one bank to the other. Charlevoix was but a mass of woods settled by Indians. Fishing and sugar making were its only industries.

The remains were brought to Charlevoix, Friday. Burial services were held from St. Mary's church Saturday at 10:00 a. m., with interment in the Catholic cemetery.

Deceased is survived by three sons, Oliver of Muskegon, who accompanied the body here, Charles and Louis of this city, and three daughters, Mrs. Jessie Shaver of Muskegon, Mrs. Ellen Paulson of Leeland and Miss Jennie Allard of Chicago.

MARRIED FOR FIFTY YEARS

Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Fairchild Celebrate Occasion Thanksgiving Day

Members of Family and Near Relatives Make the Event One Long to be Remembered.

Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Fairchild of East Upright avenue celebrated their golden wedding Thanksgiving Day with a family reunion. Those present were their son Eugene and family, who reside with them; Mr. and Mrs. John Patterson, their daughter and husband from Boyne City; their son James, wife and daughter of Beaverton, and their nephew Walter Fairchild and family of Charlevoix.

A bountiful Thanksgiving dinner was prepared by Mrs. Eugene Fairchild, in which figured the usual pumpkin pie and cranberry sauce, fricassee chicken and a huge roast turkey that came all the way from Beaverton. A pretty floral piece occupied the center of the table, for which thanks are due to the Boy Scouts, who brought Thanksgiving cheer to the homes of many sick and afflicted.

Mr. Fairchild is a veteran who served through nearly the entire Civil War, from the effects of which he has been an invalid for many years. At the close of the war he was married to Miss Martha Allen, both being natives of Ohio. In 1884 they moved to Gladwin county, Michigan, where they endured the hardships of pioneer life, and saw Gladwin county develop from a wilderness to the thriving agricultural country it is today. In 1912 they came to Charlevoix for the benefit of Mr. Fairchild's health and have since resided here.

"THE HIGH HAND"

Special Lecture to Be Produced at the Majestic
Wednesday, December 8.

"The High Hand," from the novel by Jacques Futelle, an inspiring romance of love, politics, capital and labor, will be shown at the Majestic Theatre on Wednesday evening, December 8th.

According to Manager Miles' statement this play will be equal to if not a little better than the weekly special features at the Majestic. The play is laid in the steel works and reveals the struggles of Jim Warren to reach a position of honor, high in the estimation of his fellow citizens.

Warren's path is beset with temptations of various natures, but he finally wins out and is elected governor of his state. The play is full of thrills from start to finish and is well worth your time to attend.

Now at Hart's Garage.

People desiring my services in the automobile repair line will find me at all hours at the Hart Garage on Antrim street. Will make a specialty of overhauling and repairing cars.

CHARLEVOIX BOY SCOUTS ARE ALREADY DOING FINE WORK

Over Fifty Homes Visited Thanksgiving Day—Four Rooms in Basement of the Baptist Church Fitted Up For Club Rooms—Citizens Asked to Co-operate in Movement.

A few weeks ago through the columns of this paper you read of the organization of the Boy Scouts of America. Now this work is placed on a running basis and real Boy Scout work has actually begun. Our eagle patrol is making a record not often found in scout circles. Other patrols are beginning fine work. On Thanksgiving more than 50 homes where old people sick or needy were found, each were remembered with dainties, clothing or flowers by the boy scouts. A scout tries to do a good turn every day. It is indeed pleasing to know that most of the boys of our city have enrolled.

While we are glad to be able to submit to you the above report, yet this is not the sole object of this article. In the absence of a Y. M. C. A. building Charlevoix young men and boys have no social center. True, we have a splendid library, but we do not go to the library to talk and have a social hour. We go there to read, and then not all of us can content ourselves to spend all our leisure hours in reading. We have hotels with large lobbies, but these lobbies are not for the public to use as social centers, but for their guests. We have stores and restaurants, but they are workshops and not places of play and recreation. We have a post office, but "hang out" there and Uncle Sam will have the cop after you. We have churches and fraternal buildings—yes, plenty of them—but go to their doors when the night is cold or clear, wet or dry. They are dark and cold, as if afraid of those whom they would serve. Their huge doors are bound and locked with steel, and knock if you will, but nothing save the echo of your call will return to you.

Then we have other places where our boys can "hang out." Yes, but do you wish your boy to spend his leisure hours in these "other places?" No, of course you don't, but if you do not provide the better, wholesome place, that is where your boy is likely to find him. Many a boy has gone wrong and found his way and pleasure in the "damp church houses" who never would have gone there if proper social environment had been his.

What we become depends primarily on our environment and our training. We are responsible to the youths of our land for both. A number of our young men who do not care to do the boy scout work have been organized into the Charlevoix Athletic Association with a view to carrying out not only all the work heretofore done by the County Y. M. C. A., but to do a number of things not attempted by them, and, moreover, to make our work not temporary, as was the "Y," but permanent.

As a starting point the boy scouts and the athletic association combined have secured from the Baptist church four rooms in their basement, which are being equipped for social rooms. These club rooms will be furnished as neatly as your home parlors. The committee is covering the floors with linoleum and have placed Axminster rugs in all the rooms, shades and lace curtains on the windows; a number of library tables, nice sectional bookcase, davenport, rocking chairs, a well selected line of books for youths, three daily papers and a good line of magazines to add to the comforts of the parlors. Some 40 amusements—such as checkerboards, chess, dominoes, flinch, table croquet, table golf, table baseball and authors—afford a complete repertoire of pleasant entertainment. A nice group of semi-indirect lighting fixtures have been installed and these rooms will be warmed, lighted and open day and night seven days in the week. They will be in care of the writer and two other young men. Proper discipline will be maintained at all times and it will certainly be a nice place for our young folks to "hang out."

This work is strictly non-denominational and will in every sense be disconnected with church or Sunday school. Several wished us to get a building away from any church, but the committee did not feel that it would be possible for them to pay someone to superintend the work, as the "Y" was discontinued because the whole county could not raise funds enough to keep the leader. We secured rooms where we pay no rent and have no salary to pay. It is hoped this will be but the beginning of greater work, and we earnestly invite the assistance of all the churches, their pastors, all the fraternal societies and, in fact, everybody to help us. Our young men will call on you and ask you to take a membership card and help us equip and run this work. We shall appreciate anything you do to help us.

Please be as liberal as you can now, and when our equipment is paid for we will not need nor ask for so much.

Yours for better environment and better training for our boys and young men.
Lloyd C. Vinyard.

GRADUATE OF C. H. S. MARRIED

Miss Lila Shapton Becomes Bride of Paul B. Purdy.

Both Bride and Groom Well Known in City—
Will Live in Flint.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Shapton of Flint, Michigan, on Wednesday evening, November 25th, at 5:30 o'clock, when their daughter, Miss Lila, was given in marriage to Paul B. Purdy.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. E. Bishop in the presence of the immediate relatives and a few very intimate friends.

The bride was beautifully gowned in white georgette crepe, and her bridesmaid, Miss Isabelle Mitchell of Detroit, was dressed in pale blue taffeta. The groom wore the conventional black and was accompanied by Eversz Nordrum of Detroit.

After receiving congratulations a four-course dinner was served in the dining room.

Mr. and Mrs. Purdy were the recipients of a number of handsome gifts. They left immediately after dinner for a short wedding trip to various points in Canada, and will be at home to their friends at 864 Paterson street, Flint, Michigan, after January 1st.

Both the bride and groom are well and favorably known in Charlevoix. Miss Lila was a graduate of the C. H. S. class of 1910 and also of the county normal class. She is now teaching in the Flint public schools and will continue in this position the balance of the school year. The groom is a nephew of Mrs. Sarah Emrey of this city and spent some time here about three years ago. They have the hearty congratulations of their many Charlevoix friends.

John Martin is complaining in regards to hunters trespassing on his land. He posted his land, but the signs were shot down. Thanksgiving Day one of his employes was scared nearly out of his wits by a bullet whizzing by his head. Martin wants it known that hunters will not be tolerated on his land and that he will prosecute the first one he can identify.

McCann's Bakery is about to inaugurate an advertising campaign that will make a hit with the people of Charlevoix. The plan is to issue a stamp with every ten-cent purchase at the bakery or of their product to the amount of ten cents at local grocery stores.

Customers will be given a little booklet, two pages of which are prepared for placing the stamps as received. When thirty of these stamps are placed in the book a ticket will be issued good for one admittance to the Majestic Theatre.

Mr. McCann is going after the bread business in this vicinity. One kind that he will feature weekly is raisin bread made from the celebrated California raisins widely advertised in all leading magazines.

McCann's Bakery has the reputation of putting up a brand of baked goods that is hard to equal, and they deserve the loyal support of the citizens of Charlevoix. Their advertisement on page 8 of this issue contains a special inducement for this week. Read it.

With the price of gasoline going up as fast as it has recently, many people will consider themselves fortunate that they are not the owner of even a Ford.

Nearly all sugar beets are hauled. If it had continued much longer the roads would soon become in such a condition that hauling fair sized loads would have been impossible.

Fur prices are away up this fall. Anyone that has a liking for trapping should be able to make good wages. Scarcity of fur is responsible for high prices. The women's craze for furs is responsible for the scarcity.

COUNTY NORMAL.

The penmanship papers which the class sent to the Palmer company for criticism, have been received. The corrections were written on each paper and helpful suggestions were given. The papers were satisfactory as a whole.

Thanksgiving recess began Thursday morning. Seven of the normal students spent their vacation out of town at their respective homes. Monday morning every member of the class was present again ready for work.

The third number of the Charlevoix lecture course was a lecture with stereopticon views by Henry M. Rose, assistant secretary of the U. S. Senate. The title of the lecture was "The City Beautiful." It revealed to many citizens the unknown beauties of our national capital.

Tuesday morning the class enjoyed a talk in the assembly room by Mr. Henry M. Rose. He talked about the United States Senate and of the way in which the work is carried on. He also told us of the most important bills to come up before congress at the next session.

The bulbs ordered by the normal students from the Children's Flower association of Cleveland, Ohio, have arrived. The class are planning to plant them in the hotbed, which will be used as a cold frame until the danger from frost is past, and then bring them into normal room when they are almost ready to bloom.

Last Wednesday afternoon the normal class including Miss Himes attended the "Thanksgiving program" given by the normal room children. The program consisted of a song by the school, the story of the first Thanksgiving and a recitation of verses by the 6th grade. Also one of the third graders exhibited a village made of paper which was fashioned after those built by Pilgrims. After the program popcorn and apples were served by the children.

MORE towns die for want of confidence on the part of business men and lack of spirit than from the rivalry of neighboring towns or adverse surroundings.
This is true. When a man in search of a home or a business location goes to a town and finds its people brimful of hope and enthusiasm over the prospects of the place and earnestly at work to build up the town, he soon becomes imbued with the same spirit, and as a result he drives his stakes and goes to work with the same interest. When, however, he goes to a town and everybody expresses a doubt and apprehension of the prosperity of the place, moving about and indulging in mournful complaints about imaginary evils which are likely to befall the town, he feels that it is no place for him and shakes the dust from his feet, while he departs with all possible speed for some other town. Try and make a live, enterprising, progressive town out of the one in which you live. When you are working for or saying a good thing for the town you are accomplishing a good thing for yourself.

THE Democratic national committee is without a secretary, and a considerable number of its members want to discharge the chairman. But the committee does not lack a humorist. He is the gentleman who composed the official comment of the committee on this year's election results. "They mean merely," said this document, "that the Progressives and the Republicans are reunited."

Nothing more is needed to assure Republican victory in 1916. Wilson received the electoral vote of forty-one states in 1912 and had 435 votes in the electoral college. He had a majority support in only fourteen states with 152 electoral votes. In the other thirty-four states the combined Republican and Progressive strength far outnumbered the Democracy, and Wilson won by a plurality.
The reunion of the Progressives and Republicans in 1916 is made certain by the elections of 1914 and 1915 and means that Wilson will have his fourteen states
—the solid south—and no more.

In looking over the returns of November 2nd it will be observed that wherever the fight was on national issues the Republican party won out. The "Win with Wilson" button will now be tried out as a suspender attachment, where it will also fail to make good.

THE Panama Canal cost as much as the sum now estimated for national defense. Republicans built the canal out of revenues. Democrats will probably issue bonds to pay for preparedness.

MEN vote blindly, declared the president's daughter in an address at Madison, Wisconsin. But that was in 1912.
Elections since then show that men are voting with their eyes open.

THE popular idea of preparedness for Christmas consists in going out on a shopping trip the day before the holiday, when every clerk has about 17 people to wait on all the time.

AN old colored woman when asked why she shouted so when she "got religion" replied: "If I could get religion and not know it, I might lose it and not miss it."

Ben Hur

A jolly party of Ben Hur's numbering about 50 surprised Herbert Wakefield on his birthday last Tuesday night at the farm home of Mr. and Mrs.
Alexander. A social time was enjoyed with games and music and closed with refreshments. A very enjoyable evening was spent. Please don't forget the next meeting at the I. O. O. F. hall December, 3. Don't forget the potluck.

The doctor's patient passed away in the night, and on calling in the morning he says: "Well, John, what is your master's temperature this morning?"
"Indeed, sir," replied the servant, "I should not like to say, sir. He died last night."

The president of a small college was visiting the little town that had been his former home and had been asked to address an audience of his former neighbors. In order to assure them that his career had not caused him to put on airs he began his address thusly: "My dear friends I won't call you ladies and gentlemen, I know you too well to say that."

Miss Gibson was very rich and Mr.
Hanna was very poor. She liked him, but that was all, and he was well aware of the fact. One evening he grew somewhat tender and at last he said: "You are very rich, aren't you Helen?" "Yes, Tom," replied the girl frankly; "I am worth about two million dollars." "Will you marry me, Helen?" "Oh, no, Tom, I couldn't."
"I know you wouldn't." "Then why did you ask me?" "O, I just wanted to see how a man feels when he loses two million."

As the class of a rural term was approaching, the teacher was reading a recitative piece to her class and came across the word "unaware." She asked if anyone knew its meaning. One small girl timidly raised her hand and gave the following definition. "Unaware is what you take off the last thing before you put your nightie on."

The small boy had just returned home after a most trying day at school.
"What lesson," asked his father, "was the most impressed on you today by the teacher?" "Dad I need a thicker pair of pants."

Old Michigan.

(By John C. Wright.)

From Michigan, from Michigan,
A boy once went away;
He traveled all around the world
And then was heard to say:
"For Michigan, for Michigan,
"I'm longing, I declare;
I've been to all the famous lands,
And none with it compare.

The summer time is hummer time,
The winter's grand and nice;
The pleasant fall is best of all,
And spring's like Paradise

In Michigan, in Michigan,
A country rich and rare;
In Michigan I wish again
That I were only there.

So here's a lesson you should heed
Before you start to roam:
You'll never find a better place,
Nor win a sweeter home
Than Michigan, Old Michigan,
Where skies and fields are fair—
In Michigan; I wish again
I always could be there.

The summer time is hummer time,
The winter's grand and nice;
The pleasant fall is best of all,
And spring's like Paradise
In Michigan, in Michigan,
A country rich and rare;
In Michigan I wish again
To live forever there.

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER

A Romance of the Bear Tooth Range

By HAMLIN GARLAND

father into a corner, and to rapid undertone related the story of his first meeting with Berrie, of his trouble with young Belden, of his camping trip, minutely describing the encounter on the mountain side and ended by saying, with manly directness: "I would be up there in the mountains in a box if Berrie had not intervened. She's a noble girl, father, and is foolish enough to like me, and I'm going to marry her and try to make her happy."

The old lumberman, who had listened intently all through this impassioned story, displayed no sign of surprise at its closing declaration, but his eyes explored his son's soul with calm abstraction. "Send her over to me," he said at last. "Marriage is a serious matter. I want to talk with her alone."

Wayland went back to the warden with an air of victory. "He wants to see you, Berrie. He's mellowing. Don't be afraid of him."

She might have resented the father's lack of gallantry, but she did not. On the contrary, she rose and walked resolutely over to where he sat, quite ready to defend herself. He did not rise to meet her, but she did not count that against him, for there was nothing essentially rude in his manner. He was merely her elder and inert.

"Sit down," he said, not unkindly. "I want to have you tell me about my son. He has been telling me a lot about you. Now, let's have your side of the story."

She took a seat and faced him with eyes as steady as his own. "Where shall I begin?" she blithely challenged.

"He wants to marry you. Now, it seems to me that seven weeks is very short acquaintance for a decision like that. Are you sure you want him?"

"Yes, sir; I am." Her answer was most decided.

His voice was slightly cynical as he went on. "But you were tolerably sure about that other fellow—that rancher with the fancy name—weren't you?" She flushed at this, but waited for him to go on. "Don't you think it possible that you fancy for Wayland is also temporary?"

"No, sir," she bravely declared. "I never felt toward any one the way I do toward Wayland. He's different. I shall never change toward him."

Her tone, her expression of eyes stopped this line of inquiry. He took up another. "Now, my dear young lady, I am a business man as well as a father, and the marriage of my son is a weighty matter. He is my main dependence. I am relying to have him take up and carry on my business. To be quite candid, I didn't expect him to select his wife from a Colorado ranch. I considered him out of the danger zone. I have always understood that women were scarce in the mountains. Now don't misunderstand me. I'm not one of those fools who are always trying to marry their sons and daughters into the ranks of the idle rich. I don't care a hang about social position, and I've got money enough for my son and my son's wife. But he's all the boy I have, and I don't want him to make a mistake."

"Neither do I," she answered simply, her eyes suffused with tears. "If I thought he would be sorry."

He interrupted again. "Oh, you can't tell that now. Any marriage is a risk. I don't say he's making a mistake in selecting you. You may be just the woman he needs. Truly I want to be consulted. I want to know more about you. He tells me you have taken an active part in the management of the ranch and the forest. Is that true?"

"I've always worked with my father—yes, sir."

"You like that kind of life?"

"I don't know much about any other kind. Yes, I like it. But I've had enough of it. I'm willing to change."

"Well, how about city life—house-keeping and all that?"

"So long as I am with Wayland, I don't mind what I do or where I live."

"At the same time you figure he's going to have a large income. Is that so?" He told her of his rich father's house.

Berrie's tone was a shade resentful of his insinuation. "He has never said much about his family one way or another. He only said you wanted him to go into business in Chicago and that he wanted to do something else. Of course I could see by his ways and the clothes he wore that he'd been brought up in what we'd call luxury, but we never pointed into his affairs."

"And you didn't care?"

"Well, not then exactly. But money, don't count for us much with us in the valley as it does in the east. Wayland seemed so kind of sick and lone-looking at things. — as you know, beautiful to me I couldn't help caring for him. I had never met any one like him. I thought he was a 'lunger'."

"A what?"

"A consumptive. That is, I did at first. And it bothered me. It seemed terrible that any one so fine should be condemned like that, and so I did all I could to help him, to make him happy. I thought he hadn't long to live. Everything he said and did was wonderful to me, like poetry and music. And then when he began to grow stronger and I saw that he was going to get well, and Cliff went on the range and showed the yellow streak and I gave him back his ring—I didn't know even then how much Wayland meant to me. But on our trip over the range I understood. He meant every thing to me. He made Cliff seem like a savage, and I wanted him to know it. I'm not ashamed of loving him. I want to make him happy, and if he wishes me to be his wife I'll go anywhere he says—only I think he should stay out here till he gets entirely well."

The old man's eyes softened during her plea, and at its close a slight smile moved the corners of his mouth. "You've thought it all out, I see. Your mind is clear and your conscience easy. Well, I like your spirit. I guess he's right. The decision is up to you. But if he takes you and stays in Colorado he can't expect me to share the profits of any business with him, can he? He'll have to make his own way."

He rose and held out his hand. "However, I'm persuaded he's in good hands."

She took his hand, not knowing just what to reply. He examined her fingers with intent gaze.

"I didn't know any woman could have such a grip," he thoughtfully took her fingers in his left hand. "You are magnificent." Then in ironical protest he added: "Good God, no! I can't have you come into my family. You'd make caricatures of my wife and daughters. Are all the girls out in the valley like you?"

She laughed. "No. Most of them pride themselves on not being like women. Mighty few of 'em ever ride a horse. I'm a kind of a tomboy to them."
